

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

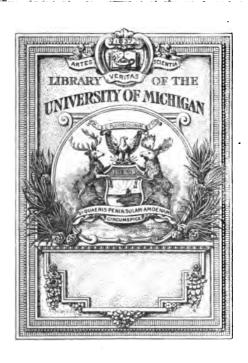

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

296 • M311 1734 1, 22673

THERD VOLUMB

LETTERS

TurkilhSpy,

Who liv'd five and forty YEARS undiscover'd at

PARIS:

Giving an Impartial ACCOUNT to the Divan at Constantinople of the most remarkable Transactions of Europe: And discovering several Intrigues and Secrets of the Christian Courts (especially of that of France) continued from the Year 1645, to the Year 1682.

Written Originally in Arabick. Translated into Italian, and from thence into English, by the Translater of the FIRST VOLUME.

The TENTH EDITION.

LONDON,

Printed for G. Straben, W. Mears, S. Ballard, F. Clay, J. Stag, D. Browne, B. Motte, R. Williamson, J. Clarke. A. Wilde, J. Brotherton, J. Haward, W. Meadows, T. Cox, W. Hinchliffe, W. Bickerton, T. Asley, S. Austen, L. Gilliwer, and R. Willock. 1734.

Digitized by GOOGIC

Digitized by Google

16: 9: Barlow 1836

TO THE READER.

UR Arabian, having met with so kind Entertainment in this Nation since he put on the English Dress, is resolved to continue his Garb, and visit you as often as Convenience will permit.

He brings along with him many foreign Commodities, to gratify the various Expectations of People. His Cargo confifting of Jewels and other Rarities, which are the genuine Product of the A 3 East;

Digitized by Google

East; and some kinds of Merchandize, which he has purchased here in the West, during his Residence at Paris.

It will be Pity to affront this honest Stranger, by raising Scandals on him, as if he were a Counterfeit, and I know not what. This will appear inhospitable, and unworthy of the English Candor and Generosity.

To speak without an Allegory, in this Third Volume of Letters, as in the former two, you'll find an exact Continuation of modern History, acquainting you with all the memorable Sieges, Battles and Campaigns, that were in Europe, from the Year 1645, to 1649. As also, with all the remarkable Negotiations and Transactions of State, Embassies, Leagues and Overtures of Princes; the Policies and Intrigues of publick Ministers, especially those of Cardinal Mazarini; the great and stupendous Revolutions and Civil Wars in England, China, Naples, Turky and Paris; the prodigious Rise of a poor young beardless Fisherman, to the Height of Jovereign Power; the dismal Tragedies of an English King, and Chinese Chinese Emperor; with the Murder of a Turkish Sultan. And all these intermix'd with proper and useful Remarks, pleasant and agreeable Stories; couch'd in a Style, which being peculiar to the Arabians, cannot be match'd in any other Writings that are extant.

If his Philosophy will not bear the Test of our learned Virtuosi, yet it may pass Muster in a Mahometan; since it is taken for granted, that the Men of that Faith rarely apply themselves to such Studies; or, at least, not in the Method used in Christian Schools. They may have the same Idea's of natural Things as we; but they express themselves in a different Manner.

As for his Morals, they are solid and grave, and such as could not be reprehended even in a Christian Writer, if we reduce what he says to Universals. For abstracting from the particular Obligations he had to his native Religion, and to the Grand Signior, whose Slave he was, there will be found little Difference between his Ethicks and ours. He every where recommends Loyalty, Ju-A 4 stice, Fortitude, Temperance, Prudence, and all those other Virtues which are requisite to fill up the Character of a Hero, or a Saint.

And who will not bear with him, for patronifing the Religion and Interest in which he was bred? It being natural for all Men, to adhere to the Notions they have fuck'd in with their Mother's Milk, In this also he shews great Moderation, and a more unbyass'd Temper, than one would expect from a Turk; which may, in part, be ascribed to his studying in the Christian Academies, his Conversation with the learned'st Men in Paris, and some of the most accomplish'd Perfons in the World. Hence it was, that he was accus'd by his Superiours at the Ottoman Port, of inclining to Christianity or Atbeism; as he takes notice, in his Apology to a religious Dignitary, in the first Letter, of the third Book of this Volume, Page 202, to which the Reader is referred for farther Satisfaction.

In his most familiar Letters, such as this last mention'd, and others to his intimate Friends, you will find some Expres-

Expressions, discovering a certain Fineness and Strength of Thought, which is not very common in Christian Writers. Which is an Argument that the *Maho*metans are not all such Blockheads as we take them for.

And though his Picture, which we have affix'd to our Translation, fince we had the Italian Tomes, represents no extraordinary Person, yet you know. Jur, venal's Remark Fronti nulla Fides. And it has been a common Observation of one of the greatest Philosophers in this Age, That by his outward Aspect, no Man, would guess what an illustrious Soul lodged, within.

If you would know how the Italian came by this Picture, (for, in his Preface, he afferts it to be the true Efficies of this Arabian) he fays, That being acquainted with the Secretary of Cardinal, Mazarini, and frequenting his House, he saw a Picture hang in his Closet, with this Inscription at the Bottom, TITUS DE MOLDAVIA, CLERICUS. Atatis sua LXXII. He asked the Gentleman who this Titus was, who has finform'd inform'd him, That he was a great Traveller, and understood many Languages, especially the Sclavonian, Greek and Arabick; on which Account Cardinal Richlieu, and his Successor Mazarini, had made great Use of him; and that the latter had caused that Picture of the Moldavian to be drawn and hung up in his Closet, from whence he had it. Our Italian being satisfy'd after some Discourse about him, that this Stranger was the very Arabian, whose Writings he had so happily found, got leave of the Gentleman to have a Draught of the Picture taken, by a skilful Limner, which he afterwards placed in the Front of his Translation.

There is one of these Letters, Page 242. wants a Beginning in the Italian • Copy. Which the Author of that Translation takes Notice of in his Preface, saying, That by some Accident or other, the Arabick Paper had been torn asunder, and one Part was missing.

There needs no more to be faid, but to acquaint the Reader, that we are going forward with the English Translation of these Letters, as fast as we can. So that in all Probability, you may expect a Fourth Volume before Christmas. Wherein you will find more particular Remarks on our English Assairs, with political Discourses on the Original and Dissolution of Governments. As also many curious Passages during the Wars of Paris, which have not hitherto come to publick View. In fine, you will there be inform'd of all the remarkable Events that happen'd at that Time, either in Peace or War, on the whole Glabe.

of

Adieu.

A 6

A TA-

A

TABLE

OF THE

LETTERS and MATTERS
Contained in this VOLUME.

VOL. III.

BOOK. I.

LETTER L

ANMUT, an Meabian et Paris, to Nathan Ben Saidi, a Jew at Vienna.
Page:1

He exhorts him to be prepared for the worst Events: To stand upon his Guard against the Christians; but, above all, to beware of himself. He tells him a Story of Carcoa, Nathan's Predecessor.

II. To

The TABLE. II. To the Kaimacham. Of the Transylvanian Agent's Business at the French Court: Of Monsieur Croffy's Negotlation with Prince Ragotski. The Speech of Prince Ragotski's Son. III. To the instructed in all Knowledge, the venerable Mufti. He makes a comparison between the Christians and Mahometans; prefers the Devotion and Charity of the latter. And relates a pleasant Passage of a Christian that whipt bimself. IV. To Mustapha, Berber Aga. Of the Battle of Mergentheim, between the Germans and French : The unfortunate Adventure of a French Officer.

V. To Shashim Istham, a Bluck Eunuch. He pardons the Scandals cast upon bim by the Eunuch; commends bis Apology; advises bim to fet a Watch on his Tougue; and relates an Adventure of a Busy-Body.

VI. To Zelim of Rhodes, Captain of a Galley. 18 He acquaints bim with the Execution of three Witches at Naples, who were bired to destroy bim by Enchantments.

VII. To the invincible Vizir Azem. He compares France to the four great Monarchies: Relates the Battle of Allersheim, and the Progress of the French Arms. VIII. To Cara Hali, a Physician at Constantinople

28 Of a blind Man who distinguish'd Colours by the Touch. Of another sobo carved to the Life. Of the Mute Saqueda; and of a deaf Man who apprehended ones Words by the Motion of the Lips. ·

IX. To

IX. To Useph Bassa.

He congratulates bis new Dignity; informs bim of the Dissolution of the Diet of Francfort, and of the King of Poland's defiring the Queen of Swedeland in Marriage. X. To Ichingi Cap' Oglani, Praceptor to the Royal Pages of the Seraglio. He expostulates with him concerning his Calumnies. XI. To the Reis Effendi, principal Secretary of State. Of the taking of Canea, and the Policy of Sultan Ibrahim. XII. To the magnificent and redoubtable Vizier Azem. Of the Duke of Enguien's Return to Paris. Mahmut extels the Hardiness of the Ottoman Generals. He relates a private Amour of Cardinal Mazarini. XIII. To Egri Boinou, a White Eunuch. He thanks him for his Intelligence of what is prattised against bim in the Seraglio. XIV. To Mustapha, Berber Aga. Of the Elector of Saxony's falling in Love with a Swedish Lady in Armour: And of the odd kind of Articles, agreed on between him and General Koningsmark, by that Means. XV. To Mabummed, Hogla, Dervise, Eremit Inhabitant of the Sacred Cave, at the Foot of Mount Uriel, in Arabia the Happy, He extols bis Abstinence, and the Happiness of a retired Life : Rebearfes the Bleffing which the Angel prenounced on that Cave. XVI. To Ujeph Baffa. 56 He acquaints bim with the Marriage of Uladiflaus, King of Poland, with Louise Marie de Gonzague, Princels of Mantua. XVII. To XVII. To the Kaimacham. He relates the Success of the French Arms in Flanders, Catalonia and Italy, that Year; with an Adventure that happen'd to the Duke of Orleans, in bis Camp before Bourburgh. XVIII. To Dgnet Oglou. He entertains bim with a familiar Discourse of bis Sickness, and of the Mind's Tranquillity: Telling bim a Story of a Man, whose Brains. were turn'd to a Nest of Serpents. XIX. To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer to his Highness. He reproaches the Europeans, with their Rebellions, and other Inhumanities. Of the Assembles at Munster and Osnaburg. Of a private Treaty between Spain and Holland. XX. To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of the Ottoman Empire. Of the mighty Fleet the French were fitting out. to Sea. Of the Predictions and Adventure of an ald Prophet, who went to Cardinal Maza-Of Monsieur Chanut, the French Embassador in Swedeland. XXI. To William Vospel, a Recluse in Austria. 74 He advises bim to turn Hermit, for the Sake of Silence and Contemplation. XXII. To the Captain Baffa. Of the Preparations the Europeans were making, to affift the State of Venice. He tells him, what the Christians say of him. XXIII. To Adonai, a Jew at Venice. He desires bim to send some Remarks on the People he has seen in his Travels. A short Character of Italy, with some Reflections on the Goths and Vandals. XXIV. To Mustapha, Berber Aga. 80-Of the present War of Candy. A memorable Saying of the Duke of Orleans, at the Surrender of Graveling, with a generous Action of	that

Prince.	٥.
XXV. To Nassuff, Bassa & Natolia.	83
He congratulates his new Honour, puts him in	mind of bis Name-sake's Fate, in the Reign of	`Ach-met III and gives bim many good Counse	els.
XXVI. To the Kaimacham.	86
Touching Morofini's quitting the Port of	Canea to the Turks.	- •
XXVII. To Care Hali, a Physician at Gon)	lanti-nople.	88
Some Remarks on the Spring, and en the	Difference between living at Confantinople	e and
Paris. The Dought of the French Philoso	phers.
XXVIII. To the Tefterdar or Lord-Treasure	W. QO
Of the French Designs by Sea, and other M.	etters:
XXIX. To Not ban Bit Saddi, a Jew at Vienn	4 02
He applauds his Reselution, not to take Relig	ion es
Truft, but to enquire inta the Grounds. And	d sends bim an Abstract of the Musiulman Histor	יייייייייייייייייייייייייייייייייייייי
XXX. To the fame.	95
-He exhorts bim, not to let Interest byass
Abr Christ of bil Religion Of the D	184.45
Down land house to describe the Chapt of	Swe Brandenburgh's demonstring the Queen of	NOW.C.
den in Marriage.	٠
XXXI. To the Kampabah.	97
Of a private League between the Venetian	5 47 4
the Baffa of Aleppo, discovered by Adon	a1 fp (
Jow. Special Influences of that Balla's Ju	vice.

BOOK H.

LETTER I.

O the most magnificent and illustrious Vizit Azem, at the Port.

Mahmut's Project to divert Cardinal Mazarini, from attempting against the Ottoman Empire.

II. To

Digitized by Google

H. To Ismael Mouta Farasa, a White Eunuch. 112
He condoles the Misfortune of Egri Boinou, whose Eyes were put out by the Grand Signior's Command.
III. To Dgnet Oglou,
He discourses more frankly to bim, on the same Subject.
IV. To Dichen Hussein Bassa, 116
Of the early Campaions the French made that Year. The Hardiness of a French Officer.
V. To Kerker Hassan Bassa. 118
He thanks him for his Present of Coffee; compares part of Arabia with the Fields of Tempe.
Concerning bis Father's bunting of Lyons, Tygers, &c.
VI. To Hussein Bassa. 120
Remarks on the taking of Retimo in Candy. A Charatter of Monfieur Varennes, the French
Ambaffador at the Port.
VII. To the fame.
Remarks on the Nature of the French, and their Method of obtaining Victories.
VIII. To the Venenable Mufti, Severeign Guide of the True Bellevers. 124
Touching the Books of the ancient Pagans. Certain memorable Paffages of Alexander the Great.
IX. To Murat Baffa.
Of the taking of Courtray by the French.
Of the Want of Rain, and Scarcity of Provisions at Paris.
X. To the Aga of the Janizaries. 133
Of the Benefit of reading Histories, and the its Consequences of Printing in Europe.
XI. To the fame.
Of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, and of Queen Christina, bis Daughter. Remarks en Queen Elizabeth.
XIL To

XII. To the Selistar Aga, or Severd-Bearer to the Grand Signior.

142
Of the Duke of Orleans his Return to Paris, after he had taken Mardyke. Of the Diet of the French.

XIII. To Abubechir Hali, Merehant at Aleppo. 144

He exhorts bim, not to grieve for the Loss of one of bis Wives, who ran away with bis Slave:

Relates a Story of an Italian Lord.

XIV. To Solyman his Cousin. 146

He reproves bim for deserting the publick Assemblies of the Faithful, and following of Schismaticks.

XV. To Hasnador-Bassy, chief Treasurer to the Grand Signior. 149

Of the Duke of Enguien's Triumphant entring into Paris, after the taking of Dunkirk.

XVI. To Ibrabim Hali Cheik, a Man of the Law.

Touching the Suppression of Brothel Houses in Pa-

XVII. To Mustapha, Bassa of Silistria. 152

He attributes the Loss of Asac, to the Valour of the Muscovites. A Charaster of that People, with the Manner of the Czars Succession in former Times.

XVIII. To Solyman Kyzlar Aga, Chief of the Black Eunuchs. 155

He acquaints bim with the Death of the Prince of Conde. The Character of that Prince, with a brief Account of his Life.

XIX. To the Kaimacham.

158

Of the Count d' Harcout's Disgrace, in decamping from before Lerida. The Success of the French Arms in Italy.

Of a strange Fountain in the Isle of Elbe.

XX. To Bajazet, Bassa of Greece. 160

He acquaints bim with his Suspicion of some deep

Designs

Designs in the French Court. Of a Fellow who raised a Sedition in Paris,
XXI. To Pesteli Hali, his Brother. 163
He thanks him for the Journal of his Travels;
Congratulates bis Escape from Male and Female Thieves; tells bim a Story of the Mogul's Father; and another of a Merchant's Widow in the Indies: With other Discourses of that Nature.
XXII. To Afis Rassa. 173
Of a Quarrel between Monsieur Chanut, the French Embassador at Stockholm, and the Swedish Secretary of State. The Repartee of a French Embassador to the King of Spain.
XXIII. To the Muffi, most venerable, and worthy of all Honour.
A Comparison of the three Ministers of State,
Ximenes, Richlieu and Mazzrini.
XXIV. To Danecmar Kefrou, Gadilesquer of Remania. 181
Of the Persidy of the Scots, in selling King Charles I. to the English Parliament. A Story of Bishop Hatto.
XXV. To Regel Humet, Antiquary to the Sultan. 186
Remarks on old Magical Statues and Images: Of the Palladium and Ancilia; Of the true Name of the City of Rome.
XXVI. To the Vizir Azem. 189 Mahmut acquaints bim with his Return from Orleans, the Reason of the great Constax of Strangers to that City.
XXVII. To the Aga of the Janizaries. 191
Of Joan d'Acre, the Maid of Orleans.
XXVIII. To Dgne Oglou. 194
Of Eliachim's falling in Love with a French Lady on the Road, as he accompanied Mahmut to Orleans.
XXIX. To . AAIA I

Digitized by Google

Of the bold Preposal which a Sea Captain made to Cardinal Mazarini; And of a magnificent Ship, which Oneen Christian Automaters XXIX. To the Captain Baffa. Ship, which Queen Christina presented to this

BAMMITTEL.
BOOK III.
LETTER I.
O Bedredin, Superior of the Convent of Der-vises, at Cogni in Natolia. 202
He makes an Apology for bis Faith against such as standered bim. Of a Hermit then living near Paris, who had almost doubled the Yearsof Bedreden.
II. To Murat Bassa. 207
Of the Christians Joy, for their Victory by Sea and Land: A Comparison between Sultan Ibrahim, and Sultan Amurat.
III. To Mahomet Techli, Bassa of Bosnia, at his Camp in Dalmatia. 210
He reproaches him with Cowardice, in decamping from before Sebenico.
IV. To Achmet Bassa. 212
He tells bim of an Attempt to murder Queen
Christing in ber Chapel.
V. To Cara Hali, a Physician at Canstantinople.
215
He discourses of the Manna in Calabria, some of which he lends him.
VI. To Kerker Hassan, Bassa. 219
Of the Revolution in China.
VII. To Darnish Mehemet Jassa. 226
Of Massianello, and the Revolution in Naples.
VIII. To Solyman his Coufin. 230
He again reprehends his Manner of Life, and perfuades

Suades bim, by the Example of bis Grandfa	- ther, to observe the Laws of Purity.
IX. To the Kaimacham. 23.	4
Of the Cruelty executed by the Turkish General	ĺ, on a Christian Priest. Of the Veneration	n
the ancient Mahometans paid to Scanderbeg'	3
Bones. Of Porsenna's Generafity.
X. To the Mufti.	8
Remarks on the Spanish Missortunes, the Insur	- rection in Sicily, and particularly on the Re	:- . volution in Naples. He prays him to furnish	3
Nathan Ben Saddi, with religious Books.
XI. This Letter wants the Title and Beginning.
24:
Of the Christians Revenge on the Son of Ali Sangiac-Bay of Lippa, for the Sufferings of	-
Sangiac-Bay of Lippa, for the Sufferings of	f
the Christian Priest. The extravagant Reveng	e of an Italian Captain.
XII. To the venerable Mufti. 24.
Of Cardinal Mazarini's supporting the Tumult in Naples. Remarks on the Duke of Guise bi Attempt to succour the revolted. A Description	7 of the Extent and Riches of that Kingdom.
XIII. To Abdel Melec Muli Omar, Superintendan of the College of Sciences at Fez. 250	•
He discourses about the Duration of the World	•
The Vision of Omar, Successor of Mahomet	:.
Of Adam's first Wife Alileth. That the	e
Earth was inhabited for many Ages before A	•
dam.	_
XIV. To the Musti. 257	7
He relates to bim the Tragedy of the Sicilian	1
Vespers. Of a Woman and ber Daughter	, that were immured seventeen Years by a Scrib	C
in Naples. A. XV. To the Kaimacham. 260	_
AV. 10 the Maimaidam. 200	,
· H	'n

He informs bire, what Reason be has to be jealous of Cardinal Mazarini's Designs against the Octoman Empire. Osmin the Dwarf's Dexterity, in prying into the Cardinal's Secrets, and those of the Grandees.

KVI. To Pesseli Hali, his Brother. 264.

He farther commends his Journal. A Rare Example of Indian Charity. Of the Ingenuity of the Chinese. Of the Conquest of that Kingdom by the Tartars. He discourses of the Original of Nations, and the unmixed Blood of the Arabians and Tartars. Of a Gun at Pequin, Two thousand Years old.

XVII. To the Aga of the Janizaries. 270
Of the famous Victory of the French obtain'd at the Battle of Lens. Of the Tumults at Paris, and the King of France's Speech to the Senators.
Mahmut informs him, how he employs certain Agents, to foment the publick Sedition.

XVIII. To Achmet Beig. 274

He acquaints him with the Death of Uladislaus, King of Poland, for which the Court of France was in Mourning; as also with the Duke of Bavaria's Death. Of the French Campaigns in Flanders. Of a Sea Fight between the French and Spaniards. Of a formidable Conspiracy against the Czar of Moscovy.

XIX. To the Mufit.

276

He seems to approve of Sultan Ibrahim's being deposed, &c. Censures his Attempt on Sultan Amurat's Widow, and his Rape of the Musti's Daughter. The Continence of the African Scipio. The Stratagem of Athenodorus the Philosopher. He incites the Musti, to encourage the Translation of Greek and Latin Histori-

XX. To Chiurgi Muhammel, Bassa. 280
Of the Conclusion of the Peace of Munster. Of
the

the Troubles of Paris, and the Duke of Beaufort's Escape out of the Castle of the Wood of Vinciennes.

XXI. To Dgnet Oglou. 281

He complains of the unjust Proceedings of the Configurators against Sultan Ibrahim: Refuses to defame him after his Death: Owns that he did but dissemble in his lost Letter to the Musti. Of the Statue of a famous Wrestler, which fell down and crushed to Death, a Man that through Envy event to demolish it. Of the Motto on Plato's Ring.

XXII. To Dancemar Kefron, Kadilesquer of Romania. 284

Remarks on the Murder of the English King Charles I. and what Cardinal Mazarini said, when he first heard of the News of that horrid Trugedy. Of Machiavet's carriest Principles.

LET-

LETTERS

Writ by

A Spy at Paris.

VOL. III.

BOOK I.

LETTER I.

Mahmut, an Arabian at Paris, to Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

Believe the News of my Imprisonment might fill thee with Doubts of thy own Liberty, and make thee careful to avoid at Vienna, such a Missfortune as befel me at Paris. Yet if thou wert much surprized at this Accident, it is an Argument that thou art but a Novice in the World, and art yet to learn the first Rudiments of useful Wisdom, which teach us, That there is no Stedfastness in Humane Affairs.

There has nothing happen'd to me in this, which I was not before provided for; neither did the Suddenness of the Event make me change Countenance. I smiled at the fulfilling my own Presages, and went to Prison as uncon-cern'd, as I would have gone home to my Lodging. Not that I would have thee think, I was infensible of a Loss so afflicting as that of Liberty; but my Chains did not appear so very formidable, having made them familiar to my Thoughts long before.

When I first came to Paris, I look'd on my felf but as a Prisoner at large, owing the Freedom I had to walk about, only to the Carelesses of the State, and the Favour of Destiny. So that when that Indulgence was retrench'd, no new Thing happen'd to me. What I had expected for Seven Years together could not seem strange when it came to pass.

it came to pais.

Ry what I have faid, thou

By what I have said, thou may'st learn to prepare thy self for the worst Events, which coramonly steal upon the secure and unthinking, being wrapp'd up in greater Darkness and Silence, than the Moments which bring them to Light. These slide away without our Advertisement, unseen, unheard: Neither can our Watches or Dials inform us any thing of them, 'till they are pass'd. So there is no Index to point out to us the bidden Decrees of Fate, 'till they are accomplish'd; no Ephemeris of Desing, but our own Experience.

Thou, and all thy Nation, are suspected by the Christians: They esteem you Enemies of their Interest, as well as of their Law. They despise and vilify you, calling you, The accursed of God. Yet they admit you as Members of their Commonwealth. They receive you to the Protection of their Laws, and entrust you with their Secrets, that they may serve themselves of your Money. Thus are you become Bankers for your sworn Enemies: And while you prosess an Eternal Obedience to the Injunctions of Moses, you make underhand Leagues with the Disciples of Jesus. I do not accuse your Commerce with these Insidels: but, I say, you have reason to be upon your Guard, when you are environed with so many Millions of Enemies. They are not ignorant of the Intimacies between the Ministers of the Sublime Port, and those of thy Nation: It is common in the Mouths of the French. That the lews are the Turks Intelligencers. Thou oughtest therefore to have a special Regard to thy Conduct, that no imprudent Action may expose thee to the Jealousy of the State where thou refidest. That Court is full of Eyes; and thou hast need of a stricter Veil, than what thou wearest in the Synagogue. The very Walls of thy House will betray thee, and thy Domesticks may prove thy greatest Enemies: Yet suspect none more than thy felf. This will not feem harsh Counsel, if thou reflectest twice on it. there being nothing more certain, than that it is not so easy to defend ones self from him in whom we confide, as from one we are jealous of. And every Man is apt to put too much Trust in himself. I believe thou art faithful and abhorrest Treachery; yet at the same Time, thou may'st be remiss and weak: What could not be extorted from thee by an open Enemy, may be discovered by the Infinuations of a pretended Friend. Thy own good Nature may cajole thee; and therefore it will be no small point of Wildom, To beware of thy felf. As for Con-.tingencies, I advise thee not to be perplexed about them, or be uneasy. Thou can't not avoid the inevitable Appointments of Heaven. Only be ready for the worst that may happen, fince thou canst never be certain of any Thing.

Thy Predecessor Carcoa was a Man of exquisite Forecast, always on his Watch, prying into the dark Orb of Futurities; yet an Accident S 2 surprized

LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

surprized him once, of which his strictest Caution never gave him Warning. I read it in one of his Letters to the Kaimacham, which thou sentestme from Vienna. The Story is this: As he was one Day writing Dispatches to the Port, a certain tame Bird which he kept for his Divertisement, fnatches from the Table the Paper on which he was writing to the Tefterdar: And the Window being open flies with it out into the Streets. The Paper was dropped in the Garden of the Augustin Friars, the very Moment when the Spanish Ambassador was walking there with the General of that Order. 'Tis true, the Letter was unfinish'd, no Name subferibed, and so Carcoa escaped an imminent Hazard of his Life. But the Secrets therein contain'd gave a vast Suspicion to the Imperial Court, it being foon carried to the Principal Secretary of State, and by him communicated to the Emperor and Strict Inquisition was made throughout the City for the Author of that Letter. A reward of a thousand Rix-Dollars promis'd to any that would discover him. The Bird was seen by many to fly along with a Paper in her Bill, but from whence she came, none knew. Nor had any curious Eye attended her uncertain Motions back: No man divining, that that Paper was defigned to transmit to the ever bappy Port, the most important Counsels of the German Empire. Neither was Carcoa's Hand taken notice of, having lived very privately, and used another Character in his common Dealings. But how near was he to a Discovery, when he says himself in his Letter, that he wanted but five Words to the Conclusion, where he would have subscribed his Name! From hence thou may'ft learn, that a Mariner in a Tempest, amongst Rocks and Sands, runs not greater Hazards, than he who acts in thy Station.

However,

However, thou may'st now continue thy Advices to Paris, but observe the Directions of Eliachim, who brings thee this Letter. He will inform thee of whatfoever is necessary for thee to know, taking this Journey on purpose to prevent the wakeful Jealousy, and active Inquisition of Cardinal Mazarini, from whom nothing can be hid that's trufted to the Polls. Receive him with fingular Honour; he is an incorruptible Friend of the Ottoman Port. From him thou shalt learn the fafest Methods of our future Correspondence. He is the Apollo of thy Nation; and his Wisdom and Fidelity will be recorded in the Register of that Empire, which shall know no earlier Period than the Moon, whose Crescent is her Arms, and the bappy Omen of her encreasing Lustre.

When thou beholdest that noble Ensign of Mabomut on the Top of the chief Temple of Jesus in Vienna, let it augment the Veneration of our Law, and convince thee, that all Nations much submit to the Massey of God, and Seal of the Prophets. Be faithful and wife, and thou cank not mis of Mappines.

Paris, 28th of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1645, According to the Christian Style.

B 3.

LET-

LETTER. II.

To the Kaimacham.

CINCE my Release, I have informed my self of some Passages, to which I was a Stranger during my Restraint. The Transplounian Agent continues fill at this Court; and his Negotiation is not now a Secret. Monfieur Creiffy is gone Ambaffador Extraordinary to Prince Ragotski, on the fame Errand from this Crown. The subject Matter of both their Embassies, is a League. Cardinal Mazarini suspected Tergiversation in that Prince, and that he would privately treat with the Emperor, if the Grand Seignior should withdraw his Assistance and Protection from him; or if he himself should grow weary of the War. Wherefore Monheur Croiffy, according to the Cardinal's Instructions would not fign the League, till Regotski had called home his Ambassadors, who were treating with the Imperialifis at Tyrne, and sent away the German Envoy from his Camp.

The League being concluded, he infifted on the Necessity the Prince lay under, of marching his Army nearer to Torfienson the Swedish General, that so they might support one another against the German Forces.

This was the Pretence; but in Reality it was designed to engage the Transylvanians beyond the Power of a Retreat, and to post them under the Eye of the Swedish General, who soon after possessed himself of Tyrne, the Place appointed for Treaty between the Imperialists and Prince Ragosski.

It is a Town in the Lower Hungary, not far from Presburgh. The Swedes enter'd this Place the 17th of the 5th Moon, but left a Garrison in it of Seven hundred Hungarian Horse, and Three hundred Foot, according to their Articles with the Besieged.

These were soon forc'd to quit the Town by Count Forgatsch, an Imperialist, the Swedes and Transylvanians being march'd a great Distance off: And 'tis said, this Hungarian Garrison yielded not unwillingly to the Imperial Arms.

Tis certain, General Torstenson puts but small Considence in the Hungarian Soldiers: For above Six hundred of the common Sort deserted him, the 29th of the 5th Moon, and the rest raised such frequent Tumults and Mutinies, that their Commanders stood in more fear of them, than of their Enemies. It's reported likewise, That there has been lately no good understanding between Ragaski and Torstenson, about the designed Siege of Prefourgh: The former seeming to much to savour the Hungarians, and being rather inclined to carry his Arms into the Emperor's Hereditary Countries. Yet he would not consent, that Prefourgh should be in the Hands of the Swedes.

The French say, that the Prince is humorous and wavering, yet of a sair Intention; but that the greatest Part of his Officers, are corrupted by the Emperor: And that therefore both they and the common Soldiers were for Peace; only his Wise, his Son, and some sew of his Counsellors, persuaded him to adhere to the Swedes:

They add, that the Young Prince, being instructed by his Mother, one Day in a full Assembly of the chief Commanders, made the following Oration, Ragotski himself being also present.

Permit

Ermit me, most Serene and Illustrious Prince "my royal Father, to perform the part of a dutiful Son, a faithful Counsellor, and a loyal Subject. The Law of Nature and of Nations entitles you to my Obedience; and the particular Honour you have done me, in admitting me to your Cabinet, obliges me to exemplify it, in an humble Remonstrance of my Sentiments, at a Time when the Interest of Transylvania calls for " Freedom of Advice.

"It is with no small Complacency that I now behold you encompassed with a Circle of Heroes, whose Valour and Fidelity may give such a Lutter to your victorious Arms, as shall eclipse the Glory of the Roman and Grecian Conquerors. The Alexanders, Casars, Scipios, and Hannibals, shall no longer draw the World into an Admiration of their obsolete Atchievements. The Register of your Deeds shall foil their antiquated Histories; whilst Plutarch, Tacitus and Livy must veil to modern Pens, the Recorders of your must veil to modern Pens, the Recorders of your must veil to Modern Pens, the Recorders of your

Let not the crafty Infinuations of the German Court, warp your Resolutions, and cajole you with the deceitful Umbrages of Peace, only to gain Time, that they may more successfully carry on the War. Neither suffer your selves, already in part victorious, to be amus'd with seign'd Treaties and Overtures, which you cannot but suspect. We are now in a Condition to give the Law; and should Fortune turn the Scale, it will still be in our Power to make our own Terms of Composition. The Alliance of Sweden and France, have raised us to a Castropacity of braving all Europe; whilst the one with a potent Army on the Rhine, the other on the Danube, keep the Imperialists in such perpentitions.

tual Action, that it will be impossible for them. " to barrier Germany from our conquering Arms. "Now is the Time to raise Transplvania above "the Title of a Tributary Province, and restore " this Kingdom, to her ancient Renown. If we " mais this Opportunity, we must for ever be " Slaves to the Turks or Germans. Let us not " feek any longer Protection, but from the Justice " of our Cause, and the Dint of our Swords. Let " not France and Sweden boast of their Turenne, "their Terstenson, as if no other Nations could " furnish the World with famous Generals! Whilst " Prince Ragotski lives, and lives at the Head of " fuch an Army, your Fidelity and Courage shall " render his Name more terrible than that of Ta-" merlain, and his Attempts more prosperous than "those of Scanderbeg. And our Posterity shall be " obliged to raise Pyramids to your Honour; and " from your present Atchievements to date a new " Epocha, the eternal Memoir of Transylvania's " Redemption.

'Tis said, That Ragotski was not very well pleased with his Son's Speech, suspecting that he held some private Correspondence with Torstenson, for whom he had no great Affection. Last Moon he insasted earnessly on the Money and Men promised him by Rebenstock. But General Torstenson thought it sufficient, that he himself was so near him with his Forces. Yet less the should take an Occasion of Discontent, he sent him a Supply of Money; though he was not without some Apprehensions that the Prince, having received it, would under-hand treat with the Emperor.

Tis faid here, that a Chians was arrived in the Transplvanian Camp, expressy forbidding Regassia to enter into the Hereditary Provinces of the B 5.

10 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Emperor. But that he, trufting to the Strength of his Army, (which confifts of Five and Twenty thousand Germans, Transstoanians, Hungarians, and Walachians) was resolved to pursue his first Resolution.

Thou knowest what Reasons the Port had tofend him this Prohibition. The French say, 'twas out of Fear that he would join with the Emperor's Forces.

By this thou mayest know what Opinion the Infidels entertain of the Measures taken by the Sovereign Divan. They descant at Liberty, whilst I send up Vows to Heaven for the Exaltation of the Ottaman Empire.

Paris, 4th. of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER III.

To the Instructed in all Knowledge; the Venerable Musti.

MAIL, Hely Interpreter of the Sacred Law; may the Divine Light guide thee beyond the Errors of Humane Frailty. I am amongst Infidels, Enemies to the Truth; who yet seem as certain of being in the Right, as thou art sure they are in the Wrong. They have us with an inevitable Hatred. I must differable my Resentments; whilst, with the lowest Prostrations to the Unity, I celebrate his glorious Mercy, who has sent us such a Star to guide our Feet into the Way of Peace.

The Christians scoff at the faithful People, as divided into several Sects. Would my Death could wipe wipe out those Reproaches, and vindicate the Honour of the Holy Profession. I could retort, that Error shews it self infinite in them; but I must hold my Peace, and restrain my self, lest my Zeal transport me beyond Discretion; remembring I am not sent here to dispute, but to act secretly for my great Master, whose Empire be extended over all the babitable World.

These poor Wretches boast much of their Traditions, their Sacred Synods and Fathers, as if we ever wanted Holy Men, working Wonders, and penetrating into the prosoundest Mysteries, but only: wiping their Eyes with the Dust of their Feet.

They talk much of Faith and Reason; at which I smile, as knowing it to be only Education. Yet, as the worst of People have something that is good, so these are not wholly destitute of Devotion. They pray often, but not so often as the true Believers; it being, as thou knowest, a just Exception against a Witness amongst us, That be, prays not fix times a Days They pray to Menand Women deceased, whereas thou knowest, there is no Deity but One. They fast often, but: not so strictly as the affished with the Vertue of the supreme Dispenser of Graces. They are charitable, but this hinders em not from excluding all from the blest Abodes, who are not of their Belief: Whereas thou affirmest (who art the Refolever of all the Problems of Faith) that it will go well at the last Day with all honest People, seeing these have all the same Object of Worsbip; and. their different Religions are but as so many different Ways, which lead a Man to the same Place, of Reft, like various Roads to the fame City.

These Christians whip themselves often with small Cords; which Humour, say they, was set on Foot by an Hermit's Preaching and Example. Not many Countries distant from that where I am, there happen'd such an odd Instance of this extravagant Zeal (which was to be heighten'd, it feems, with the Fumes of Wine) as plainly justifies our Prophet's Wisdom, in charging the Faithful to avoid it. It was particularly the Custom of feveral People in this Place, in their Processions, to whip themselves, 'till the Blood streamed down their Frocks, which were so made as to cover their Faces, and leave only their Backs bare. One of these Zealots, distrusting the Firmness of his Constitution, had taken such large Draughts of this intoxicating Liquor, that reeling up and down with his Whip in his Hand, and his Head against the Walls, he was followed by all the Boys of the Town hooting after him, which so lessened the Repute of this fottish Religion, as made them abstain for the future from this pompous Usage of it. What low Thoughts have these People of the Almighty Lord of all; when, allowing him to be Omnipotent, yet represent him to themselves and others, as delighting in Cruelty; whereas, thou knowest, this Passion is only to be found amongst the weak and miferable.

B.6.

12 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

That the Divine Preserver of Men may continue thee long for the Edification of his Elett, are the passionate Wishes of the meanest of thy Servants, Mahmut.

Paris, 4th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER IV.

To Mustapha, Berber Aga.

WOULD to GOD I could converse with thee Face to Face in the Seraglio, as in former Times. I vent many passionate Wishes to Constantinople, that happy Residence of my best Friends, the Nursery of my Childhood, the School of my Youth, and I hope the future Repository of my old Age. When I think of that City, 'tis with a Passion hardly second to that, which I cherish for the Place of my Nativity. In Arabia, 'tis true, I first saw the Light of the Sun, but 'twas in Greece I received the more friendly Illumination of the Moon, the Splendors of the true Faith; which though they difclose not to us so clear a Prospect of the Earth and all its Gayeties, yet they present us with an unveiled Discovery of the Heavens and Stars; shewing us Paradife, with its glittering Inhabitants the purpled Colonies of true Believers, Champions and Martyrs of the Eternal Unity. In the Defart I left my Father, or rather he left me before I found my felf, being but an Infant when he died, but in the City I found Friends, which is not a less endearing Title. He gave me but my Birth, whereby I entered on the Stage of Miseries; with which he foon after left me to flruggle, before I could distinguish Misery from Happiness. But they gave ane Education, which taught me how to shun those Evils, which are the natural Consequences of our Birth. So that in the main, I am more indebted to them than to him. Let it be how it will, I cannot cease to love them, and often wish my self with them. This is a fecond Nature. And because I cannot have my Desires sulfill'd in that, I gratify my self by often writing to them. Should I make Comparisons, thou wilt say, I am a Flatterer. Suffice it to tell thee, that thou art one of the Number, whose Remembrance affects me with sensible Complacency. Yet I cannot write to thee, nor any of my Friends, so often as I would, without entrenching on the Obligations I have to the other Ministers of the sublime Port. I send Dispatches to all by turns, sacrificing my private Regards to the Expessations of the State, and the Pleasure of my Superiors.

14 LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

Had I been at Liberty, I could have fent thee the earliest News, of the Slaughter which the Germans made three Moons ago in the French Army at Mergentheim. 'Tis not too late now to fay fomething of it. The Imperialists owe that Triumph to the Candor of Turenne, and the degenerate Craft of the Duke of Bavaria; who, to hill the French in a fatal Security, sent an Agent into France to negotiate a Peace, with deceitful Overtures and Umbrages; commanding also, that none of his Soldiers should dare to call the French their Enemies. Yet some lay the Blame of this Overthrow to the Swedes, whose unseasonable Suspicion of a private Treaty between the French and Germans, hinder'd Torftenson from joining with the former; and exposed Turenne, with his raw. and unexperienc'd Forces, to the numerous Army of Veterane Imperialifis, Twas a fatal Engagement, and the French loft many brave Men; besides an Hundred and sifty Commanders taken Prisoners, sisteen hundred of the common Soldiers, Fifty Ensigns, with many Waggons, and Four Mules laden with Money.

It is reported, that whilst Turenne, in the general Retreat and Flight of his Army, betook himfelf to Mergentheim, as he lay on his Bed the first Night, one of his Officers was coming to alarm him with the News of the Germans Approach to that Town, but unfortunately stumbled at his Chamber-Door, with the Noise of which Turenneawaked; and fearing some Attempt on his Life, leaped off his Bed with his drawn Sword, and making toward the Door, just as the Officer opened it, he run him into the Heart. By which Mistake he himself, and the Troops that were in the Town with him, had like to have fallen into the Hands of the Bavarians. But receiving Notice of their Approach accidentally by fome other Means, he withdrew his Troops out of the Town by a contrary Road, and escaped the Purfuit of his Enemies.

This Victory has given new Courage to the Imperialifis, and has not much dispirited the French, who are by this Loss enflamed with greater Ardors, mediating a speedy Revenge. The Genius, of this Court seems to be undaunted, breathing nothing but War.

I shall not fail to send thee such Intelligence, as will demonstrate, that Mahmut passes not away his Time in vain.

I pray the Sovereign of as many Empires as there be Worlds, to distinguish thee by some particular. Mark of his Favour, from the Crowd of those he makes happy,

Paris, 4th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER V.

To Shashim Istham, a Black Eunuch.

T length thou hast condescended to beg my Pardon, for the Calumnies thy Tongue has loaded me with. I am not ill pleased with thy Letter. It abounds with elegant Expressions of thy Sorrow, for an Offence to which thou hadit no Provocation. Thy Submission, though late, abates my Resentment; and, if thou performest thy Promise, 'tis banished. The first Crime so ingenuously acknowledged, claims a Title to Forgiveness. Let eternal Oblivion seal it. I am not by Nature revengeful. I rather blush for Shame, than grow pale with Anger at him that injures me. Yet Self-Preservation will rouze our Choler, which is the most active Humour, and precipitates many to violent Courses. The Effect it has on me is to put me on my Guard, left he who has wronged me, without any Signs of Repentance, should continue his Malice to my Destruction. But thou hast disperfed all my Suspicions by thy seasonable Address; and if I cannot pronounce thee innocent, I will believe thou art not incorrigible. The best Advice I can give thee is, henceforwards to attend to thy own Affairs, and refrain from those of others; remembring the Arabian Proverb, He that peeps in at his Neighbour's Window, may chance to lose his Eyes. There is a great deal of Wildom couch'd in these short Sentences. They are not the Product of one Man's Experience, nor of a few; but they are the Result of universal Observation. And our Country has been happy above others in the Choice of her Proverbs. This

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris.

that I mention'd is peculiar to the East, yet I can produce an Instance, whereby 'twas lately verified in the West.

There is hardly a Night passes in this populous City, wherein some Murder is not committed in the Streets. Two Nights ago a Man was found dead on the Ground; whereupon a Tumult was gather'd about his bleeding Carcase. Amongst the rest, a Fellow came crowding in, inquisitive what should be the Matter. Those who stood by heholding his Cloaths bloody, which he was not sensible of himself, seized on him as the Murderer. His wild Looks encreafed their Jealoufy; and the incoherent Words with which he endeavour'd to excuse himself, render'd him guilty in the Judgment of the Rabble. They carried him before a Cadi, by whom he was firstly examin'd: He stoutly denied the Fact; and no Proof could be brought against him, but his flained Clouths. 'Tis the Custom here, to put to the Torture Persons suspected of capital Crimes, in order to draw a Confession of the Truth. This they did to this poor Wretch; and in the Extremity of his Pains, he acknowledged he had killed his Wife that Evening, but was altogether innocent of this poor Man's Death, who was murder'd in the Streets. All the Torments they inflicted, could force no other Confession from him, save that which his real Guilt prompted him to make. For which he was condemned to Death, according to the Laws. Thou feeft by this, that had he gone about his Business, without prying into other Mens Matters, he might have escaped a Discovery. But that meddling Itch of the Imprudent betray'd him (not without the particular Direction of Fate) to a Death, which indeed he merited, but net not on the Score of the murder'd Man, whom he went out of his way to fee.

Thou wilt fay, this Story is not applicable to thy Case, fince thou hast never yet embra'd thy Hands in any Man's Blood. I tell thee, what I have said, was not designed as a Reflexion on thy past Offence (let it be forgotten;) but as a Caution for the suture, not to engage thy self in Matters out of thy Sphere. For, a busic Body is never without Troubles.

Above all, I counsel thee, to practice the Government of the Tongue, which is a great Vertue, especially in the Courts of Princes. The Arabians say, That the Wise Man's Soul reposes at the Root of his Tongue; but, a Fool's is ever Dancing on the Tip.

Thou hast no reason to take in ill part, the Freedom with which I advise thee for thy Good; unless thou thinkest thy self too old to learn. But, I have a better Opinion of thee, than to rank thee among Pythagerar's Asses.

I have faid enough for a Friend; too much for an Enemy. It is in thy own Choice to make me which thou pleasest. Adieu.

Paris, 4th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER VI.

To Zelim of Rhodes, Captain of a Galley.

Hou hast never vouchsased to acknowledge the Advice I sent thee some Years ago, of a Christian's Design against thy Life. Perhaps he wanted an Opportunity, to put his Revenge

Revenge in Execution that way; and therefore, the Caution I gave thee looked like a falle Alarm. Thou trustest in thy Courage, the Strength of thy Vessel, the Multitude and Fidelity of thy Slaves, and thinkest thy self invulnerable. But, let me tell thee, that neither thy Courage, nor thy Vessel, can defend thee from the Stroke of Definy; and thou hast no greater Enemies than those who eat thy Bread. Whether it be the Continuance of thy Cruelty, or the natural Regret of Servitude has rendered them so, I know not; but, if what I am informed of be true, thou art the miserablest Man in the World. Wert thou only in Danger to lose thy Life by a Stab, a Bullet, or the swift Effects of Poison, it would be a Happiness, in Comparison of the Method that is now taken to destroy thee. And the invisible Death which thou wert formerly to receive from a Prayer-Book, would have been foft as the Stroke of Capid's Arrow, in Respect of the Tragical and Unbeard of Fate, which is now preparing for thee. Think not I go about to amuse or affright thee with Chimera's and Tales, such as Nurses use to awe their Children into Compliance and good Manners. What I tell thee is Matter of Fact. and confirmed by many Letters from Italy, to feveral eminent Merchants in Paris, I have seen fome of them, and hear that the rest agree in the same Relation.

They give an Account, that at Naples, on the fecond of the last Moon, three Witches were seized, and accused of practising diabolical Arts; of enchanting several Persons; of doing great Mischies; and, in fine, of having private Commerce with the Devil. They stoutly denied all at first, and made very subtle and plausible Apologies. Insomuch, as the Inquisitors were almost persuaded of their Innocence; till it was suggested gested, that their Houses should be search'd. Of ficers were sent accordingly; who after a narrow Scrutiny, found fome magical Books, several Vials of strange Liquors, Pots of Ointment's with an Image of Wax, refembling a Man, but partly melted. There were imprinted on the Breast of the Image several unknown Characters, Figures and magical Symbols: And on the Forehead was to be read ZELEM EBEN SA-GRAN. All these were brought, and exposed before the Inquisitors (of whose Office thou art not ignorant;) great Deliberation was had about this unusual Emergency. The Imaums and Chelks were fent for and consulted. The Witches were examined apart, and put to the Torture, as is the Custom in Capital Crimes. Admirable was their Constancy for a considerable Time; but at length, overcome by the Continuance and Sharpness of their Pains, they confessed they had for some Years practised magick Arts, convers'd with familiar Spirits, raised Tempests, Earthquaker, and done other wicked Feats. Being examined about the Image of Wax, they declared. That it was the Image of a Turkish Captain of a Galley, whose Name was written on the Forehead: And that they were hired by certain Italians, who had been Slaves in the Galley of the faid Captain, to bewitch him to Death, in the most lingring Method they could invent; that in order to this. they had made this Image; that every Night they met together, with a fourth of their Gang, (who was not to be found) and made a Fire of the Bones of dead Men, which they stole from the Graves and Charnel-Houses. That they laid this Image down at a convenient distance before this Fire, repeating certain magical Words and Charms; and, as this Image gradually melted, so the Body of the said Turkish Captain did insensibly fibly waste and decay. And, to add to his lingring Death an intolerable Torment, they basted the melting Image with the Oils, and other Liquors which were contained in the Vials and Pots: That by this Means he was perpetually racked with most pungent and acute Pains in his Bowels, Head, and all Parts of his Body, raging under most violent Fevers, infatiable Thirst, and want of Sleep. Finally, that this lingring kind of Death would continue, as long as they pleas'd to protract the Dissolution of the waxen Image.

20

This Confession, tho' extorted from the Witches in the midst of insufferable Torments, yet was deliver'd without any Inconsistences, and with all the Demonstrations of a real Penitence. And being seconded with the Testimonies of many credible Witnesses, who had overseen them in some of their nosturnal Ceremonies; the Inquistors, moved with a just Horror of so nesandous Abominations, sentenced them, To be burnt, and their Aspes to be scattered into the Sea. Which was accordingly executed on the sixth of the last Moon, in the Presence of infinite Spectators.

The News of this extraordinary Event is fresh in the Mouths of almost all the Inhabitants of this City; yet no Man, I dare say, hears it with that Concern for the Turkish Captain, as I do. Even those among the Christians who abhor Witchrast, would nevertheless rejoice, if not only thou, but all the Massachular were destroyed with Enchantements; since they can never hope it will come to pass by the Success of their Arms.

I am not credulous of every Story that is related of Witches, being satisfied, that Superstition and Ignorance has listed many in that insernal Number, who were innocent and never deserved its some having been forced by Racks and Tortures

2 . . . ?

tures, to confess themselves guilty of practising Enchantments, when, after their Execution, there have appear'd evident Proofs to the contrary. Yet I cannot be fure, but that there have been some in all Ages and Nations, who have entered into Leagues and Affociations with Devils, and have been enabled thereby to perform Things above the Power of Nature. However, I have a particular Defire to hear from thee, and to be informed, whether thou hast experienced the Effect of their Enchantments. If thou hast not, bless thy Stars that thou wert born and bred a Musialman, against whom the Magick of the Infidels cannot prevail; and that thou haft swallowed the Impression of Mahamet's Seal, which is of Force to disfolve and make invalid, all the Charms of Men and Devils. But if thou hast felt the Force of their Enchantments, and pinest away with unaccountable Pains and Languors; then think with thy felf that thou art defective in keeping some Point of our Holy Late; that Mahomet is angry with thee, withdraws his Protection, and exposes thee to the Malice of Evil Spirits. Neither persuade thy self, that because the three Witches are put to Death, thou shalt presently recover thy former Health and Ease again: For, fo long as there is a fourth living, and out of the reach of Justice thou art not safe. Nay, if she were taken and executed too, so long as thy Enemies are yet alive, who first employed these Hags, thou art still at their Mercy. They will fearch every Corner of Italy, and of all Europe, but they will find Instruments of their Revenge. They will rummage Hell itself, to gratify their Fury. The best Counsel I can give thee in this Case is, To pacify thine Enemies, by extrordinary Acts of Civility to the Christians, whereever thou meetest them; by using thy Slaves mildly, and giving them their Freedom, after a limited time of Service, without exacting a Ranfom, which neither they nor their Relations and Friends can ever be able to pay. This will abate the Rancour of the Infidels, and turn their Revenge into Kindness and Love. Thou wilt every where be free from Dangers; and those very Persons, who now study all means to take away thy Life, will then hazard their own to preserve thee from Death.

Think not that I go about to persuade thee to change Temper with thy Slaves, and from the Resolution and Bravery of a true Mussulman, to fink into the abject Timorousness of a Christian. Be fearful only of thy felf, and stand in Awe of none more than of thy own Conscience. There is a Cato in every Man, a severe Censor of his Manners; and he that reverences this Judge, will feldom do any thing he need to repent of. Let not the Authority of any Station tempt thee to be cruel and unjust; but, in all things, Do as thou evouldst be done unto. This is a Precept engraven on every Man's Heart; and he whose Actions write after this Copy, will always be at ease bere, and transcendently bappy bereafter. Follow this Rule, and thou wilt experience the Effect. Adicu.

Paris, 1st of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER VII.

To the Invincible Vizir Azem.

If one may judge of future Events, by applying to them the Symptoms of Things past; and if a Man may compare one Kingdom with another, I should think that France will in time extend the Limits of her Empire, as far as any of the four great Monarchies, that have been recorded in Histories for their universal Sway : I will not say, as far as the wide-stretch'd Empire of the evervictorious O/mans. Yet the Genius of this Nation feems in some manner to inspire the French with as ardent a Thirst of Glory and Conquest, as that which has in all Ages appear'd to be the inseperable Virtue of the Mussulmans. They press forward to the Mark for which they take up Arms; that is, to subdue all before them, and lay Kingdoms, Provinces and Cities, at the Feet of their Sovereign. They are not discouraged at Difficulties and Losses. The Checks and Oppositions they meet with, do but animate them with new and fresh Vigours. So that it is become a sure Prognostick of some great Success to that Nation. when at any time they receive ill News from their Armies. In this, their Courage seems to be of the Quality of Naptha, which by pouring on of Water takes Fire, although, thou knowest, these two Elements be contrary to each other. So this Warlike People, instead of being dejected, or made timorous by any Defeat given to their Armies, are rather inflam'd with more active and valiant Resolutions, as will appear by the Repulse given them by the Duke of Bavaria, not many Moons ago.

As foon as that News arrived in this City, one. would have expected to have seen some Tokens of Fear in the People, but it wrought a contrary Effect. No Tears of Women and Children. no compassionate Sighs for their slain Husbands, Fathers or other Relations; no down-cast Looks, or ominous shaking of Heads; no melancholy Whispers or portentous Stories were murmured in the Ears of the Multitude: But all Things appeared lively and prosperous: the very Women exciting the young Men to lift themselves Soldiers, and the Boys in the Streets making all their Pastimes consist in imitating the Men of Arms, and learning the Discipline of War. There was no need to force Men to the Field. No fooner was the King's Intentions to raise new Forces divulged in the Provinces, but thousands came voluntarily, and took up Arms, chusing rather to feek honourable Deaths in the Toils. and Hazards of War, than to lead inglorious Lives at Home, in the foft Enjoyments of Peace.

These Things appeared to me as certain Presages of the rising Greatness of this Monarchy, and an evident Sign that the French Nation in this Age, shall out-do their Ancestors in Warlike: Deeds.

The Stage of that bloody Combat, between the Forces of the Duke of Bavaris, and those under the Command of Mareschal Turenns, was Mergantheim. Since which there has been a more fierce Encounter between the French and Imperialists at Allersheim. Wherein the former have recovered the Honour they seemed to have lost in the Spring, owing much to the Bravery of the Landgrave of Hesse-Cassel, who, with his Regiments, had a considerable Share in the Astions of this Day; and therefore he has been presented C

The Duke of Enguien, notwithstanding his Wounds, marches on the next Day with his Army to Norlington, offering to that Town a Neutrality and Liberty for the Garrison to march out, which consisted of three hundred Bavarians. But receiving a fierce Asswer from the Gavernour, he could the Approaches to be made in order to an Assault, which was begun that very Night, and a Breach made in the Walls; upon which the Inhabitants were forced to intercede with the Duke, that there might be a Cessation of Violence till the next Morning, promising that then the Soldiers should surrender at Discretion; which was done accordingly.

There he tarried eight Days to refresh his Army. Then he marched to Dunkenspule, which was defended by a Garrison of Five hundred Bavarians. He took this Place by Storm, yet gave Quarters to the Soldiers, who laid down their Arms, and yielded themselves Prisoners. Leaving a Garrison of three hundred French in the Town, he removed his Forces toward Heilbrun. But in regard this Place was defended by Fifteen hundred Men he sophore to assault it, and only quartered quartered his Army in the neighbouring Villages.

Since that Time, which was about the middle of the last Moon, there has been no considerable Action between the French and the Germans. Yet those who pretend to be vers'd in military Affairs, laugh at the ill Conduct of the Arch-Duke Leopold, who when he had the French shut up in a narrow Streight, through which it was impossible for them to pass but by single Files, neglected that Opportunity to cat them off, deferring the Victory (whereof he was too secure) till the next Day, by reason of the present Wearines of his Soldiers. In the mean Time Turenne, with his whole Army, pass'd the Streight in the middle of the Night, and came to Philipsurgh.

This overfight of the General is much talk'd of, because, had he pursued his Advantage he had not only entirely defeated the French, but in all probability, falling with the whole Force of the Empire on the Swedes, he had likewise vanquished them, and so put an End to the War. But it seems as if the inscrutable Providence had determined to insatuate the Minds of the Germans, and reserve those two potent Nations, their Enemies, to be a farther Scourge to the Empire.

Adieu, great Guardian of the eternal Monareby, and believe Mahmut, when he folemnly swears by Mount Sinai, and by the tenth Night of the Moon, that he adores thy consummate Virtue and Wisdom, which never fail thee in Extremities.

Paris, 8th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1645.

C. 2

LET.

LETTER. VIII.

To Cara Hali, a Physician at Constantinople.

A m weary of writing News of Battles and Sieges to the Grandes; and I know, those feldom troublest thy self with the Care of foreign Transactions. Besides, I have no certain Intelligence of Moment to communicate. But I can acquaint thee with something more agreeable to thy Studies and Genius.

Here is a Man in this City who was not born blind, but by some ill hap lost the Use of his Eyes. Yet Nature seems to have recompensed that Misfortune in the Exquisteness of his Feeling. Thou wouldest say he carried Eyes in his Fingers ends, fince he diffinguithes those Things by his Touch, which are the only proper Objects of Sight. Believe me, I think, there can be no Deceit of Confederacy, whereby he might blind others, instead of being so himself. I saw him muffled up with a Napkin which covered all his Face, then divers Pieces of Eaftern Silks, of various Colours, were laid on the Table before him. He felt them attentively, and told us the Colour of each Piece exactly. I who was never over-credulous of extraordinary Pretences, fulpecting that either the Fineness of the Linen which veiled his Face, might give him some Glimpse of the different Colours, or that some By-stander, with appointed Signs, might inform him, caused all the Company to withdraw, except a learned Dervise, who was intimate with me. We threw a thick Velvet Mantle over his Face which reached down to his Navel, girding it about about his Waist, so as to leave his Arms at Liberty. Then I procured small Shreds of Silks, sinch as I could conceal in the Palm of my Hand: These I caused him to touch with his Fingers, brought up as high as his Chin, so that 'twas impossible for him to see them; had he had the Use of his Eyes; yet he made not the least Mistake in sive several Colours. We changed the Order of the Silks, and sometimes gave him the same Piece four or sive Times together; yet, as soon as he had selt it; he readily soid us, 'twas the same Colour.

· Itell thee, O learned Heli, fuch an uncommon Experiment, afforded me Matter both of Delight and Wonder. I concluded from hence, that Nasure is no Niggard in her Gifts, but supplies the Defects of one Senie, by the Super-abundant Accuracy of another. We affect this blind Perfort By what Distinction he thus knew one Colour from another, without the Help of his Eyes. He wainot able to express the particular Manner of this differiminating Sentation; but only sold us in general, that he felt as much Difference between the red Silk and black, as he had formerly done during the Enjoyment of his Eye fight, between the Silks of Perfia, and the fine Liven of Europe: Which, thou knowest, are as different to the Touch as fine Paper and Vellum.

Thou that daily pryest into the Baculties of Humane Bodies, art betterable to judge whether this Man's Excellency lay in the Tennity and Finencis of his Skin, the Subtilty of his Spinits, or fome unusual, powerful, yet delicate Energy of his Soul; or, whether, it confided in all these together.

The Debuise who was with me, seemed not much to admire at this rare Quality of the blind Man 2: Talling, me, moreover, That about serf Years ago in his Travels; he had feen a blind Statuary at Planese, who undertook to make the Refemblance of an Image in the chief Temple of that City, which he fmith'd to much to the Life, that his Work could no otherwise be diffinguish'd from the Original, than by the Difference of the Materials, that being Alabaher, his white Clay; which he so tempered and moudded with his Pingers; as he continually self-cost the setter, that no Lianus ment was left-unempered.

Indeed, when I reflected on our Mates in the Seraglio, and the unaccountable Sagacity with which they apprehended there Words which they never heard, I cear'd to be surprised at what I had feen the blind Man perform, or what the Derwife had faid of the Statuery. I remember in Sultan Amurath's Time there was a Mute, in whom the Grand Signier took infinite Delight. For, befides athonfand pretty Geffures and Tricks, with which she used to divert that Prints; he often made her his Secretary, employing her in writing Letters to his Beffa's and others whilft he dichsted to her by Signs. Although the could never seceive the Sound of Words, nor utter any that were articulate; yet I have seen her transcribe a whole Chapter in the Alcoron, containing a humdred and fewenty Verficles, in as fine a Character, as the most celebrated Seriber of the Empire; and when the lind done, would explain what the had thus written by Signs, which made it evident that the perfectly understood the Alceran.

These are rare Gifts, my Friend; yet were all the Mates educated with as much Diligence and Care, as was Saqueda, (so she was called) 'tis possible they would attain to greater Perfection. I have been told, that her Tates, one of the learned'st Men in Arabia, bestow't many Years in teaching her this Method of Reading, understanding and Writing.

This puts me in mind of a Man who was bred a Mahametan, but being taken Captive by the French, embraced their Religion, not in his Heart. but only in outward Profession. When I first came to Paris, I fell into his Company by Accident, and understanding that he was an African. I defired to ask him some Questions, but he was damb, so that I had almost haid aside my Hopes of conversing with him; till perceiving that he moved his Lips, and opened his Mouth as one that was talking, I offered him Pen, Ink, and Paper, making Signs to him, that I would gladly know his Mind in Writing. He accordingly writ in Moresco, that he was firuck deaf and dumb about eighteen Years fince, telling me also the Place of his Nativity, and how he came hither; I took the Pen, and in the same Language express'd my Compassion of his Missortunes. When he saw that I understood Moresco, he writ again, fignifying to me, that if I opened my Month wide at the pronouncing of every Syllable, he could understand my Meaning by the Posture of my Lips and Tongue. I found his Words true. to my no small Admiration; for he would write down what I had faid. We conversed together often; and at length I procured his Escape in the Retinue of a Chiaus that was returning from hence to Conftantinople.

I befeech the wise Archivest of Nature, and Repairer of Humane Defetts, either to continue to us the Use of our Senses, or to supply that Want by some superlative Endowments of the Mind.

Paris, 20th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER IX. To Useph Bassa.

Hou wilt say, I am unmindful of my Duty in not congratulating thy new Honour before this; and that I forget the good Offices which formerly pas'd between us in the Seraglio. I tell thee my Obligations are infinite, not only to thee, but to many others of my Friends at the Port: It is impossible for me to acquit my Self of fo many Engagements. As for the Dignity to which the Sultan has raised thee, I received the first News of it within these fourteen Days. And I dare affirm, that none of thy Friends, or of those whose Dependence is on thee could with greater Complacency behold thee vested by our most august Emperor, than I read the Letter which conveyed to me this welcome Intelligence.

Long mayest thou live to enjoy the Blessings which thy good Fortune has heaped on thee. Yet I counsel thee to enjoy them so, as not to forget thou must die. Let not the Grandeur of thy Station render thee proud and wilful: But remember, when thou art furrounded with a Crow'd of adoring Suppliants, that Death shall level thee with the meanest of thy Slaves. Thus the ancient Philosophers spared not to perform the Office of Monitors to their Kings and Princes: And I hope thou wilt not take in ill Part the wholesome Advice of Mahmut, who discovers a Temper void of Hypocrify, in the Freedom he assumes. If thou givest Ear to Flatterers, they will complement thee to thy Ruin; and when thou art on the Brink of a Precipice, they will will persuade thee there is no Danger, though, if thou goest on, they know thy Fall is inevitable. They will pride themselves in the Dexterity of their Malice, and insult over thee with scornful Sarcajas, whom not long ago they idolized.

The eminent Command thou hast, requires thy frequent Presence in the fovereign Divan: And that thou may'st not fit there, only as an Auditor of other Men's Counsels, and incapable of making one in the Number of those, who become remarkable by their Orations, or Reports of foreign Events; I will now entertain thee with some Passages; which have happened in Europe since the Beginning of this Year, whereas the other Bassa's may possibly be ignorant.

The Diet of Francfort, which had continued for? three Years, was diffolved on the 12th of the 4th Moss. This may beknown at the Part, while: they remain Strangers to the Retion of it. There . are a fort of Christians in Germany, whom they call Evangelicks. These are opposite to the Roman Church, both in Religion and Interest: and their Cause is chiefly espoused by the Dukes of Sanony and Brandenburgh. It was to comply with thefe. that an Affembly was appointed at Ofnaburgh; but : the Emperor and the Catbelieks were either for continuing that at Francfort, or translating it to-Munster. While the contending Parties were bickering, and striving to gain their several Ends, the Deputy of the Duke of Bavaria; tired out with such intolerable Delays, departed from? Francfort, whom the rest of the Departies followed. And this those mayest report for the true Occasion of the Dissalution of that Diet.

Thus, at the Beginning of the Year, the Difputes which those Infidels raised about safe Coduct

24 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

duct, Ruaciness of Titles, Priority of Address, and many other vain Pantilie's, hindred them from coming to any Conduston about a Peace, which was the principal Cause of their assembling. And this is a folly peculiar to the Naucasenes, that in all publick Assemblies the very Strength and Vitals of their Counsels are spent in a vain adjusting of empty Ceremonies.

. It is credibly reported here. That the King of Poland carpelly folicites a Match with Queen Christine of Swedeland, but has not hitherto had any politive Answer, or effected any thing in it. In the second Moon of this Year, that Queen fent an Ambaffador, to give the King of Poland an account, That the had taken the Government upon her. While he tanded in the Polish Court, there were not wanting such, as by the King's Order. fifted his Inclination, in Reference to this Affair. It was proposed to him that this Match would be a happy Occasion to unite the two Kingdoms in a firm and durable League: That the Eventelicks in Poland would be much eased thereby: That Uladiflaus was not much decayed in his natural Vigour: That Swedeland might in the mean while be governed by the Council; with many other Proposals and Encouragements to this Purpole. Among which I must not omit, that it was fuggefied, how easy 'twould be for two such potent Crowns, in Conjunction, not only to humble the Germans, but also to put a Stop to the victorious Arms of the Ottoman Empire. But all this came to nothing, that wary Queen fulpoeting that there was a deeper Defign in the Courtship of this old Fox; and that by such a Mateb, the Kingdom of Swedeland, in Default of the Issue Royal, might be subjected to a foreign Cress.

However,

However, it is easy to apprehend from this that if the Poles maintain at present their Accordwith the sublime Port, 'tis for want of Strength to break it; and that they only wait an Opportunity to make some potent and firm Alliance, which may second the Designs formed by that Court against the first Throne on Earth, whereof thou art one of the principal Pillars.

Remain firm in thy Station, and let neither the Tempets of War, nor the Convulsions of State, which are the too frequent Products of Peace, shake thy Constancy. But above all, suffer not thy Integrity, which is the Basis of all Virtues, to.

be undermin'd by Bribes.

If thou followest this Counsel, God and his Prophet shall establish thee, all Men will honour thee, thy Sovereign shall exalt thee; and Mahomet wills rejoice to see thee in Time become the Atlas. of the Eternal Empire.

Paris, 5th of the 10th Moon, of the Year 1645,

LETTER X.

To Ichingi Cap' Oglani, Præceptor to the Royal Pages of the Seraglio.

Here is a wast Disference between thy Letter, and that of Shashim Isham. He is eloquent in the Acknowledgment of his Crime, thou rhetorical in thy own Justification. Thou hast plundered Demossbenes and Cicero, and robb'd'em of all the Flowers and Tropes of Oratory, to dress up as faint, lifeless Excuse. Such an artificial Apology, instead of cancelling, heightens thy Offence. It might might have procured thee the Applause of the Academy; but it comes short of giving me Satisfaction for the Injuries I have received at thy Hands, I have Reason to esteem them such; because so design'd, altho' they took no Effect. For Wrongs of this kind ought to be measured by the Intention of the Author, not by their Success. The Ministers of the Divan will hardly be prevailed to suspect Mahmut, who has given substantial Proofs of his Fidelity. Tell me, in the Name of God and Mabomet, what was the Motive that induced thee to flander me? Wherein have I merited this Persecution at thy Hands? It could not be revenge, because I never gave thee Occasion; unless thou still retainest a Grudge on the Score of my Studying in the Academies; and that at my Return from Palermo, thou wert not able to expose me in the Presence of the Musti, in any Point of Language or Learning. But I had rather charitably believe 'twas thy Ambition, not thy Malice, which gave Birth to those Calumnies thou hast vented against me. Thou enviest me the Honour of serving the Grand Seignior in this Station, thinking thy self capable of discharging this Office more successfully than Mahmut. I censure not thy Abilities; but think 'tis best for every Man to be content with his own Condition, fince Defing distributes the Exployments of the World among Men, by Rules into which we cannot penetrate.

36 LETTERS Writ by Vol. HIL.

Thou art Master of the French Tongue; but dost thou think that a complete Qualification for a Man in my Post? Art thou sit to converse in the Court of a foreign Prince, who canst not govern thy Tongue in that of thy native Sovereign? Thou art yet to learn a Courtier's Masterpiece, which is, To dissemble even the necessary

Art

Art of Dissimulation. That is, as the Arabians say, To have a Veil upon a Veil; or as the Italians, To have a Mark with a natural Face on the outside. Thou art so far from this, that thou canst not yet draw persectly the first rough Strokes of a Counterseit.

To speak plain, hadst thou by any artificial feigning of Friendship to me, made Way to insinuate thy Story into the Belief of the Grandees, thou mightest have praised me to my Ruin. But to go bluntly to Work, without preventive Enconiums, discovered at once the Weakness of thy Judgment, and the Strength of thy Passion; giving the Ministers Occasion to think there was less of Truth, than of Design in thy Accusations.

For the Future, I advise thee to mind thy Books and Scholars, and meddle not with Mahmut, whose Business is to study Men. Adieu.

Paris, 5th of the oth Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XI.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary of State.

WITH extreme Joy I have received the certain News of the taking of Canea by the invincible Ottoman Arms.

I must confess, when I first apprehended the Intentions of Sultan Ibrahim, to make War with the Republick of Vanice, I was apt to hearken to some thinking Men in this Court, who, making their Observations of the Sultan's indulging himself himself in Female Pleasures, conjectured from thence (as by a common Rule) that he would not have discovered such a martial and active Spipit, in afferting the Honour of the Ottoman Emgire. His Dexterous concealing his Defigns, even to the very Execution of them, has struck a Damp into all the Courts in Europe, infomuch as Cardinal Mazarini this Day told the Queen Regent, That he doubted left Sultan Ibrabim would prove another Junius Brutus, who being the Nephew of Tarquin, one of the Primitive Kings of Rome for fome Years, counterfeited an extraordinary Simplicity and Weakness of Spirit: But having privately secured a Faction to his own Interests by popular Arts, he, to gain the Sovereignty, changed the Form of Government, procured himfelf to be made Conful, and discovered a Genius, furpaffing in Policy and mature Judgment, all his-Predecessors.

8 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Though the Cardinal's Comparison be disproportionate to the Grandeur of the fovereign Em: peror of the World, who cannot without a valt Injury be postpon'd in Virtue, Wisdom or Power, as a Second or Imitator of any Prince upon Earth: Yet the Character holds good in the main, That he has timely and maturely diffembled the most Sublime Abilities and Endowments a fovereign Prince is capable of, rendering thereby his Enemies secure and careless: till at length all those illustrious Attributes exert themselves on a sudden, breaking forth like the Sun from an Eclipse; at once dazling the aftonish'd World, and surprizing the Enemies of the Ottoman Empire, in the Slumbers which proceeded from the Contempt of his facred Majesty.

I thought indeed once that the Venetians would have been in a Condition to have faced the Ottoman Navy, and disputed their farther Progress on the Seas. I expected no less than that they would have made some husting Attempts on the Isles of Archipelage; that they would have enter'd the Hellespone, braved the Dardanels, and sailing forward would have block'd up the Ottoman Navy in the Propontis, or driven them into the Euxine Sea for Shelter. And who could have thought otherwise, had they been provided for a War? But our sage Emperor, by Secrecy, which is the wery Soul of all great Undertakings, has anticipated their very Bears, and leap'd upon the Prey while the Keepers were asseption.

Had the Christian Princes and States laid aside their private Punctilio's and Animosities, when the Peneticus sirst made their Application to them for Assistance, it might have proved a doubtful War. But instead of generously uniting their Forces in the common Desence of Christians, they begin to divide their Enterests and Hearts one from another, and that upon the vainest Motives in the World, one State disputing with another about Precedency of Posts in the Army, which proceeded to that Height, as to structure the main Design: For the Posts himself at last is forced to saise the greatest Aids the States of Venice are like to have; joining his Gallies with theirs, and sending a thousand Foot on Board at his own Cost.

Thus does Divine Providence, out of the Difcords of Christian Princes, draw Occasions to enlarge the secred Empire of the Mussulmans, and to spread the Ottoman Conquests o'er the Western World.

Paris, 20th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER XII.

To the Magnificent and Redoubtable Vizir Azem.

T appears that the Queen of France is very in-dulgent to her Generals, having called home the Duke of Enguien from the Toils of War. This Prince neglecting the Wounds he received in the Battle of Allersbeim, not many Days after, fell into a violent Fever; so that he was carried in a Horse-Litter to Philipsburgh, with no small Danger of his Life. As foon as he recovered his Health, he was commanded to return to France, and the Charge of the whole Army committed to Mareschal Turenne.

Such Tenderness is never shew'd to the invincible Ottoman Generals, neither would they esteem it a Favour, but a Disgrace. When they go to the Wars, they make no underhand Leagues. with the Elements to spare their Bodies, but are refolved to combat with Cold, Heat, Hunger, Thirst, and all the Hardships to which Soldiers are liable, as well as with the Swords of their Enemies. They take no other Armour against. the rigorous Frosts of a Russian Winter, or the scorching Sands of a Persian Summer, but an unshaken Resolution, an invincible Patience, and a Mind incapable of bowing under the worst Misfortunes. They are not angry with the Weapons of their Adversaries, when they carve in their Limbs, the Marks of an Honour, which will far outlast the Pain of their Wounds; and in their Flesh hew deep Characters of an immortal Fame, and a Renown which shall know no Period. They are not parlimonious of their Blood.

Blood, but court their Enemies to spill it on the Ground, from whence it will spring up in Laurels and Wreaths, to crown them with Triumphs and Glory whilst they live, and for to sweeten their Memory with the Praise of suture Generations.

Thus, Magnanimous Vizir, do the Mussulman Heroes, the Props of the first Empire, manifest them Courage, in defying of Dangers and Wounds, and scorning to capitulate with Fortune, for Base and Exemption from Death. They know, that when they march against the Insidels, 'tie in Vindication of the sternal Unity; and therefore, inflead of endeavouring to fhun, they court a Death fo glorious, as that which will immediately transport them to the Basem of our bely Pri phet, and to the inexpressible Delights of the Gardens of Eden. Where this Truth is firmly rooted, there is no Room for Fear to plant it felf. But the Cale is otherwise with Infidels, who biaspheme that purest undivided Essence. They affert and believe a Plurality of Gods, and therefore, in Time of Danger, amongst so many Deities, they know not whom to address, or whom to confide in. The Apprehension of Death is terrible to them, whose Hope is only in this Life; whose Consciences are stained with a thousand Pollutions, and yet renounce the very Method of being clean. Who not only err themselves, but by their evil Example and Influence, (for I speak of the Princes and Great Ones) draw innumerable after them, to taste of the Tree Zacon, which grows in the middle of Hell.

People speak variously of the Dake of Enguier's Gonduct in the Battle of Albersbeim. His Creatures extol his Valour and Experience with Hyperboles; whilst his Enemies endeavour to letten his Reputation. Some say, he owes his

Revo-

42 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Revocation to the Queen's Diflike; others attribute it to the extraordinary Concern she has for his Health. But such as would be esteemed the wifer Sort say, his return is voluntary and fought by himself, scorning to hold his Commiffion any longer at the Pleasure of Cardinal Mazarini, who, his thought, first procured him this Employment, only to have him out of the way, and take off his Application from the domestick Affairs of Prance. These are the Discourses of the People at present, who yet perhaps may change their Opinions before the Sun goes down. They will always be censuring and descanting on the Actions of their Superiours; few being willing to think their Tongues were given them to lie Idle. It is but a little Member, but often does great Mischief by its Activity. One of the Ancients gave no good Character of it, when he called it a Damon. Yet we are not bound to believe all that the Philosophers faid. As for gave the most impartial Account of this Member, when he said, 'Iwas the best, and the worst. Sometimes I fit filent many Hours together; not for want of Company, (for here's a Glut of that in this populous City;) nor because I know not what to fay, (for I could speak a great deal more than 'tis fit for others to hear) but that I may fludy with less Interruption, how to serve my great Master. For much talking enervates the Judgment, and evaporates the Mind into Air. Besides, by thus practising Silence in private, I learn the Art of restraining my Words in publick, when it is requisite to promote the Ends at which I aim. Tis not for a Man in my Station to be open and talkative, but to diftinguish Persons and Seasons; to understand the due Stops and Advances of my Tongue; formetimes to fay much in a little, at other times ta to say little or nothing at all; but ever so to speak, as not to lay my self naked to the Hearers; yet to seem a very frunk, open-hearted Man, in what I discourse of.

I would not have thee conclude from what I have faid, that Mabmut uses any Reserve to the Ministers of the Divan, who are Mines of Science and Wifdom, and can eafily difcern the Heart thro the med artificial Veil of Words. But it is absofutely necessary for me to use Dissimulation in this Court, feeming many times ignorant of what I really know, that I may not be thought to know more than they would have me. I was never yet to indifcreet, as to publish any Secret that was committed to my Charge, whereby I have gain'd great Confidence with Men who delight to unbosome their Intelligence. They effects me a Man of Intogrity, and fit to be trufted. Thus am I made privy to many Intrigues of the Grandees, and a Repository of the Court News: whilst they whisper in Mabmut's Ear what is transacted in the Royal Bed-Chambers, and private Apartments.

By this Means I came acquainted with an Amour of Cardinal Mazarini, which is known but to a few. This Minister has none of the worst Faces, and a proportionate Elegance in his Shape: Much addicted also to the Love of Women; yet he manages his Intrigues with that Caution and Privacy, as not to expose the Honour of his Function. Among the reft, he had freement Access to the Chamber of a certain Counsess Dowager, her Husband being lately deceased. This was not carried so privately, but 'twas whifpered about that a Man was feen often so come out of this Ladies Chamber a little before Day; but no Body knew who it was (for the Cardinal went diffuifed.). At last it came to the

44 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

the Queen's Ear, who was resolved to unravel this Intrigue. She caused Spies to be placed at a convenient Distance from the Lady's Chamber-Doors which opened in a Gallery of the Royal Palaces with Orders to trace him home. That Night the defigned Watch was first set, it fortuned that the Cardinal being in the Counteffes Chamber, her Maid, who was privy to this Amour, overheard these Spies talking to each other concerning her Lady, which made her more attentive (being in a Place where she could not be seen) till at length she plainly discovered, That they by in wait to find out who it was that had been seen coming out of the Chamber. She quickly aequaints the Countefs with this News. She consults the Cardinal what was best to be done to avoid Discover ry. In fine, it was agreed between them, that the Countess should put on the Cardinal's Disguise, and he a Suit of her Cloaths; that she should go out at the usual Hour of his Retreat, and walk in the Gardens; that if examined, she should pretend this Disguise was to guard her from the rude Attempts of Men, who if they found a Lady alone in the Night-Time, would not fail to offer some Incivilities; that soon after her Departure, the Cardinal should go forth in her Drefs, and shift for himself. This was perform'd accordingly. The Countess walked into the Gardens in the Cardinal's Disguise, followed by the Spies, whilst he goes to an intimate Friend's House, (an Italian, whose Fortune depended on this Minister) and changes his Female Accourtements for the proper Apparel of his Sex. The Countess having walked about half an Hour in the Garden, was seized on by some of the Guards, under Suspicion of some ill Design. She was carried before the Queen, and examined. She then then discovered her self, begging the Queen's Pardon, and telling her, that a particular Devotion had obliged her to take that Course for several Mornings; but if it offended her Majesty, she would hold her self dispensed with, and would forbear. The Queen seeming satisfied with this Answer, dismissed her. Thus the Amours of the Cardinal and the Countess remained a Secret; and there are but three Persons (besides themselves) that know any thing of it, among which Mabmut is one.

Thou seest. Allustrious Minister, that the Reputation of my Seerecy, has gained me the Considence of one of the Cardinal's Privado's; for I had this Relation from the Italian whom I mentioned, at whose Hosse the Cardinal changed his Disguise. I am not without Hopes, by the prudent Management of this Discovery, to penetrate farther into the Court Intrigues. For he that told me this Story; considered not that he made me thereby Master of his Fortune, and that it is no longer safe for him to deny me any Intelligence I require of him. He has put a Key into my Hand, which will open his Breast at my Pleasure.

Yet I need not magisterially claim Discoveries from him, as the only Conditions on which he is to expect my concealing what he has already disclosed. There is a more dexterous and serviceable way to become his Confessor, without such an ingrateful Insult; whilst with a well acted Candour I feign a Relation of such Things as I suspect, yet cannot be certain are true, till attested by himself, professing at the same Time not to believe those pretended Reports I heard. If I shall be so happy as to do any effectual Service to the Grand Seignior by this Engagement, it will answer my Ends, and I shall not repent of my Crast.

Mahmuş

46 LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

Mahmut falutes thee, fovereign Baffa, in the humblest Posture of Adoration, lying prostrate on the Ground, in Contemplation of thy Grandeur. Beseeching God that he would grant this Favour to thee, to live happily, and to die in thy Bed.

Paris, 20th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XIII.

To Egri Boignou, a White Eunuch.

Ho u givest me abundant Proofs of the Affection and Friendship, in frankly telling me what they say of Mabmut in the Seraglia. I do not expect to be free from Ceniure; and am fo far from being discouraged at the Obloquies some Men fasten on me, that it adds to my Comfort; it being an affured Mark of Innocence to be traduced. I am not defirous that the Arabian Properb should be verified in me, which says, That he deserves no Man's good Word, of whom all Men speak well. I dread to be popular at such a Price, and will rather court the Slanders of the envious, by a fledfast Perseverance in my Duty, than lay a Train for the Complements of Flatte-Reason I have to say this. There needs no Interpreter between us. Though the Black Eunuch has recanted his Aspersions, yet there are others who perfift in their Malice; and it will be difficult for the Master of the Pages, with his best Rhetorick, to exempt himself from the Number.

I have

I have received both their Apologies, and have aniwer'd them. I wish they would reform this Vice; not so much for my sake, who am Proof against their Accusations, as for their own: For the Injury they intended to do me, will redound most to themselves. Misery is on him that persecuteth his Neighbour.

He that is merciful and gracious, who hath feparated the Brightness of the Day from the Obscurity of the Night, defend both thee and me from the Malice of Whisperers, from the Enchantments of Wizards, and such as breathe thrice upon the Knot of the Triple Gord.

Paris, 20th. of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XIV.

To Mustapha, Berber Aga.

Ho wilt laugh at the Hypocrific and Folly of the Nazarenes, when thou shalt know the Articles agreed upon between the Eletter of Saxony and Koningsmark, one of the Swedish Generals, on the 27th of the 8th Moon.

The Swedes had prevailed on the Son of the Eleflor, to intercede with his Father for a Truce; but the old Duke would not heaken to any thing of that Nature, till Torftenson gave Orders to the Swedish Army in those Parts, that they should oppress the Elector's Subjects, by exacting from them unreasonable Taxes and Contributions; and that they should lay desolate all the Countries about Dresden, if they resused to pay what was demanded of them. Accordingly they took a Castle,

48 LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

Castle, which commanded a large Valley of Meadows and Corn-Fields. The Swedes burnt the Corn on the Ground, led away the Peasants Captives, and demolished many Towns and Villages; yet not without some Loss on their side; For the Saxons one Night stole upon them while they were securely sleeping, and slew an hundred and Twenty, taking above three hundred Prisoners. Those who were left in Possession of the Castle, met with no better Fortune; being compelled in a few Days to surrender this their new Conquest, with Five Ensigns and a Hundred and sifty Prisoners, which were all carried in Triumpla to Dresden.

One would have thought that these Successes should have confirmed the Elector in the Aversion he had already conceived for a Treaty, that he would rather have pursued his good Fortune with Arms; especially when by entring into a private separate Treasy with the Swedes, he must needs give a great Suspicion to the Assembly of the Deputies. But the old Duke doted; and what neither the repeated Solicitations of his Son, nor the continual Ravages which General Koningsmark made in his Territories, could procure from him, that he granted to the charming Addresses of a beautiful Lady.

The Elector's Son adhering much to the Swedish Interest, and finding all other Means inessectual to oblige his new Friends; it was agreed upon between him and Koningsmark, that he should at least, perswade his Father to a Truce of a sew Days: That, during the Cessation of Arms, the Son should invite his Father to a Banquet, where Koningsmark should he present, with some of the principal Swedes in his Army. All this succeeded according to their Wishes. The good old Man consented to a Cessation of Arms, and and to give Koning [mark a Meeting at his Son's Banquet. The German Gallantry, and indeed that of all North Europe, confilts much in their excesfive Drinking: He is esteemed the most polite Man who can bear most Wine, with least Alteration of his Temper. This they call Carousing. The Son had provided Plenty of those Wines which grow on the Banks of the Rhine, esteem'd the wholesomest and most delicious of all these Parts. It is not necessary to repeat particularly their first Salutes and Addresses: Both Parties feemed emulous to exceed in Civilities. fell to their Wine with Freedom and Mirth, after the Manner of the Country. When in the midst of their Glasses, whilst the Heart of the old Duke was elevated with the Juice of the Grape, came into the Room a tall Personage all in Armour, and making his Obeysance to the Company, delivered a Letter to General Koning smark; the General having received it, the Stranger was invited by the Elector's Son to fit down with them. He was Master of the Feast, and only Koningsmark and the Stranger, besides himself, were privy to the Intrigue.

2

The Stranger unbuckled his Helmet, and pulling it off (for all the rest of the Company were uncovered, it being the hottest Day in all the Summer) discovered a Face and Hair, much like one of those Nymphs described by Poets and Painters.

The Duke could not withdraw his Eyes from this surprizing Beauty, nor fix his roving Thoughts: Sometimes it put him in Mind of Ganymede, the discarded Minion of Jupiter; but Ganymede was never seen in Armour. Then he thought of Adonis, then of the Babylonian Pyramus, the Indian Atys. In sine, he run over all the celebrated Youths of the East, to match the D Beauty

Beauty of this illustrious Stranger. He drank and gaz'd, whilst his Son and Koningsmark were pleas'd to see the Baits take. From ruminating on our Sex, he pass'd to that of Women: and remembring that in some former Battles between the Swedes and Germans, several Ladies had disguised themselves in Armour, and followed General Torssenson to the Field, he concluded presently, that this was some beautiful Female of Swedeland.

This Thought put the old Duke into a pleasant Fit of Raillery, yet not without some Mixture of Passion for this lovely Heroine. There was something so peculiarly graceful in all her Carriage and Address, as charm'd the Eletter's Heart. The Women in those Parts of Europe, are not so precise in their Conversation with Men, as in the East. And 'tis a great Point of Education, so to adjust the Punstilio's of their Deportment, as neither to appear too open, nor too reserv'd. This was her Master-piece, for she so equally divided the Parts she was to act, both of a Maid and Soldier, that neither entrenched on the other, but she acquitted herself with exquisite Honour and Gallantry.

The next Day after the Banquet, the Son renewed his Mediation for a Treaty, but the Elector feem'd cold. All his Thoughts were busied in ruminating on his fair Enemy.

Not to detain thee longer in Expectation of the Issue, the Love of this young Amazon had taken so deep Root in his Heart, that he would grant nothing but for her sake, neither could he deny any thing which she desired. Thus, by this Stratagem, they accomplished their Aims, and he condescended to a Treaty, after sourteen Days Debate on the Articles: Of which I here send thee a true and particular Copy, that thou mayest find some Divertisement in the Folly of the Insidels. The Articles are as follow:

THAT

HAT it should be lawful for the Duke " to keep due Faith to the Emperor 3 " nor should he be obliged to admit any thing " contrary to the Interest of the Empire.

"That the Elegar should not lend the Emperor "above three Regiments of Horse, nor should " permit him to raise Soldiers in his Principality.

"That the Swedes should have free and safe " Paffage through Saxony, provided they came

" not within three Miles of Dresden.

"That there should be free Traffick between " the Elector's Subjects and the Swedes by Land " and Water.

" That at the end of three Months, each Party "fhould be obliged to declare, whether they would prolong the Truce, or break it off.

"That the Elector should again enjoy his Reve-" nues, except those which were drawn from Leib-" fick. That he should pay the Swedes Eleven thousand Rix-Dollars a Month, and a certain " Quantity of Corn.

"That the Elector should do nothing which " might hinder the Siege of Magdeburgh."

These Articles, at first Sight, appeared to be equally favourable to the Saxons and to the Swedes. But in reality they forved only as an Umbrage to deeper Designs, which the Swedes had in Agitation. For this was the first Step to draw the Saxon off from the Emperor's Party; and Torftenson was now secure, that whilst the Swedes rushed farther into Germany, the Saxons would not moleft them behind.

For my Part, I neither understand the Policy nor the Integrity of the Elector, in figning these Articles; nor how he can reconcile the first of them with any of the rest: To give sale Conduct.

duct, and kind Entertainment to the Enemies of his Sovereign: To be obliged not to lend him any more Affiftance than his Enemies shall allow, nor fuffer him to raise Forces at his own Charges: To be cheated of his own Revenues, and tamely yield to pay a monthly Tribute besides: To be tied up from succouring one of the principal Towns in his Principality, at that time befieged by the Swedes; this is a new Method of keeping due Faith to Sovereigns, or of observing common Prudence for ones felf. But Women and Wine cause a wise Man to stumble, as the Arabians say. And this old Prince is bleffed in a hopeful Son, who is not ashamed to turn Pimp, that so he may betray his Father to his mortal Enemies. But let the Christians proceed in their Falshood and Treachery one against another, whilst every good Musulman prostrates himself five times a Day; and prays in his Integrity for the Confummation of that Time, wherein God has determined to put a Period to the Monarchies of these Infidels, and to reduce them to the Faith and Obedience of his boly Law.

I wish some of my Friends would send me some Relation of what passes in the East: I have heard nothing of Moment out of Asia these many Moons, I could almost think my self banished from the eternal Providence, whilst I reside among these uncircumcifed.

Think sometimes on Mahmut; and if thou canst not relieve his Melancholy, at least, Pity him, whom all the Honours and Pleasures of the Western Parts, would not be able to exhilarate, so long as he apprehends himself forgotten by his Friends at Constantinople.

Paris, 20th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER XV.

To Mahummed Hogia, Dervise, Eremit inhabitant of the Sacred Cave, at the Foot of Mount Uriel in Arabia the Happy.

Hy Remembrance is as the Dew of the Evening, or the Midnight Breezes in Africk, after the scorching Fervours of a Summer's Day, when neither Trees, nor House, nor highest Mountains afford any Shadow. Such are the Employments of State, keeping the Mind in as reftless an Activity, as that which the Philosophers fay is the Occasion of Heat Such also is the Refreshment I find in thinking on thee, whose Soul is a Mansion of Tranquillity, an Umbrella of Temperance, and all Virtue. Thither I retreat for Respiration from the Fatigues of Worldly Bufinels. Pardon the bold Accels of an humble Slave, who cannot be so happy as to visit thee any otherwise than by Letters, yet would be miferable in the want of this Privilege.

Ever fince I had the Honour to kiss the Dust of thy Feet in that facred Retirement, I was filled with Love and Admiration of thy Sanctity. Thrice happy are the neighbouring Shepherds. whose Flocks feed under thy auspicious Prote-No fierce Lions, no ravenous Tigers, dare violate that Sanctuary, or hunt for Prey within those Meadows, consecrated by thy Prefence. That rich and flow'ry Vale, was first socured with an eternal Immunity from Spoil and Rapine, by the Bleffing of our boly Prophet. Now that Bleffing feems to be redoubled by thy Prayers and Abitinencies, who inheriteft his Spirit as well as his Abode. 'Twas in that boly D 3 Cave.

54 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Cave, the Messenger of God fasted for the space of three Moons: Thy whole Life there is one continued Abstinence. When thou liftest up thy venerable Hands to Heaven in Prayer, the Enemies of our bely Law are seized with Fear and Trembling: Thou art the Guardian Angel of the Ottoman Empire. Thy Body attenuated with twenty Years Fasting, is purified almost to Immorsality: Thou art become a Denizon among the Spirits. Neither the Beafts of the Earth, nor the Fowls of the Air, nor the Fish of the Sea, will charge thee with their Blood. Thy Table never fmoak'd with slaughtered Dainties. Every Tree affords thee a Feaft, and the Meadows regale thee with a thousand harmless Delicacies. Thy Thirst is allay'd with the Crystal Streams; and when thou art disposed to banquet, the Arabian Sheep supply thee with Nettar. Thus like a prudent Traveller, thou accustomest thy self before hand, to the Diet of the Countrey whither thou art going: Thou livest the Life of Paradise here on Earth.

Thou art not privy to the Wickedness of the Age: That Cell guards thee from other Mens Vices, while thy incomparable Humility defends thee from thy own Virtues. Thou art not puffed up with thy sublime Persections. Pride is a Serpent which commonly poisons the Root of the fairest Endowment. But thou hast crush'd this Serpent in the Egg.

In that Solitude the Angel opened the Heart of the Sent of God, and took out from thence the Devils's Seed-Plot. When Mahomet awaked (for this was done while he lay in a Trance) he faid, I am a Worm. When Gabriel faw his Humility, he pronounced a Bleffing on the Place, That wholoever would dwell in that Cave, food be meek as Abraham, chafte as Joseph, and temperate as Ismael.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS.

Hmael. Thou hast experienced the Effect of his Benediction.

There is another Happiness also attends thy Retirement; thou livest free from Cares and Anxieties; thou committest the publick Good to the Conduct of thy Sovereign, and thy private We!fare, to the Protection of Providence; neither disquieted for the one, nor folicitous for the other. Who rifes, and who falls, in the Favour of the Sultan; who purchases the Government of the Empire by their Merits, or who by their Money; whether it be better to remain in the Seraglio, or to be made Bassa of Agypt, are Cares that never molest thee. Thou canst fit in that Sanduary of Peace, and pity those whose Ambition, and the Love of Glory, has driven into the Toils of War. Thou canft behold with Compassion the burthensome Attendants of the Great; their Labours by Day, and their Watchings by Night; their refiless Thoughts and busy Actions; macerated Bodies, and uneafy Souls; while with indefatigable Pains they purfue mere Shadows, and endeayour to grasp the Wind, or secure to themfelves a Bubble, which is no fooner touched, than it vanishes. Thou in the mean time art filling thy Mind with folid Knowledge, and laying up. Possessions which shall never be taken from thee: For the Soul carries her Goods along with her to that other World.

I often wish my self with thee; and the Remembrance of what I once enjoyed in thy Conversation, cannot be effaced by Distance of Time and Place. The farther I am from thee, the more ardently do I long to see thee. But even in these innocent Defires, there is a necessary Mortification; since we are not born for our selves, but to comply with the myserious Ends of Pate. I am appointed to serve the Grand Signior in in this Place; where I endeavour to acquit my felf a faithful Slave, and a good Muffalman. If I fail in the first, my great Master will punish me; if in the last, God and his Prophet will revenge it. Yet I, hope every Frailty will not be esteemed a Transgression, since the Heart and the Hands go not always together. I often strive to imitate thy Abstinence, but my Appetites are too strong for me: I return to my old Course again, like a Bow that is forcibly bent. Yet I sin not in this, since it is not required at my Hands.

56 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Pray for me, boly Man of God, that while I aim at the best Things, I may not fall into the worst; and by striving to aim at Persedien, I may not crack those Powers which are requisite to keep me stedfast in the High-way of moral Virtue. I leave thee to thy Contemplations, and the Society of thy courteous Angels, who ever wait at the Door of thy Cell.

Paris. 20th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XVI. To Useph Bassa.

Formerly acquainted thee, That Uladiflaus, King of Poland, fought Christina, Queen of Sweden, in Marriage; but that his Proposal was rejected. Now thou may'st know that this Monarch has made a more successful Amour, being married to Louise Marie de Gonzague, Printess of Mantua. The Nuptial Solemnities were perform'd in this City by the Ambassador of Poland, who was his Master's Proxy. The greatest part of the last Moon was spent in Masks, Banquets, and Court-Revels to honour the Espousals of this new Queen, who is fince gone towards Poland, being attended to the Frontiers by a numerous Train of the Nobility, with all the Ceremonies and Regard due to a Person of her Rank.

The French, who are never sparing in Words, are too liberal in the Praises they bestow on this For if all were true they say of her, she might be lifted in the Number of Angels; whereas some more impartial Eyes have discovered such Impersections, as speak her yet on this side a Saint. But ordinary Virtues in Princes dazzle the Multitude, borrowing a greater Luftre from the Nobility of their Blood, and the Eminence of their Quality; whilst-their Vices are either shrouded from the Vulgar, or made to pass for Virtues, in the artificial Dress which Flatterers put on them. 'Tis under this Advantage the new Queen of Poland is cry'd up for a Diana; tho' a late Satyrift vindicates her from being half so cruel as that Goddess. It being no Secret that a young Italian Marquis had something kinder Usage than had Alteon, when he accidentally encountered this Princess, as she was walking alone one Evening in a Grove belonging to her Palace.

I am no Patron of Libels; nor would I speak irreverently of those whose Royal Birth claims Respect from all Mortals. But the Stupidity of the Nazarenes provokes my Pen, who allow their Women all the uncontroulable Freedom and Opportunities, that commonly give Birth to the most irregular Amours, and yet believe 'em innocent. They are perfest Idolaters of that Sex, not having learned, with the illuminated Mussulmans, That Women are of a Creation inferiour to that of Men, have Souls of a lower Stamps and consequently more prone to Vice; and that they shall never have the Honour to be admitted into our Paradise.

D 5.

But:

58 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

But thou who believest the Doctrines clear and intelligible, and hast kis'd the Garment of the Sent of God, wilt not suffer thy Reason to be blinded by the Enchantments of these deluding sair ones; but so love Women, as still to remember thou art a Man, which is something more sublime.

Paris, 1st of the 12th Meon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER XVII.

To the Kaimacham.

To is hard to guess where the Premb Victories—will terminate. Either Fear, or the Desire of: Novelties, opens the Gates of most Cities to them; and when that will not do, the Force of: their Cannon makes a Passage into the strongest Holds of their Enemies, and puts whole Provinces under their Subjection.

Their Enemies fay, that the French never befiege a Town, but their first Assaults are made with Bullets of Gold; and when that will neither prevail on the Governour, nor win a Party, then they only try the Force of the coarfer Metal. Yet this will appear but, a Slander, if thou considerest a late Action of the Duke of Quicans, when he lay: down before Bourbourgh.

He had scarce sinished his Trenches, when the next Morning an Aerow was found with a Letter fastened to it, not far from his Tent. The Letter was directed to the Duke, and subscribed by the Gevernour of the Town. The Contents of it were, to signify to him, That if he would give him.

Digitized by Google

Fifty thousand Pieces of Gold, and continue him in his Office, he would the news Night open the Gates, and let in his Army; and that before Mid-day he would send a Messenger to know his Pleasure. The Duke waited the Arrival of the Messenger, who seconded what his Master had said. But the magnanimous Prince, instead of accepting his Offer sent him back to his Master with this Messenge, That he came not before the Town as a Merchant, to purchase it at the Price of a needless Treason; but as a Soldier, at the Head of an Army, sust with continual Villaries; summoning him forthwith to surrender at Discretion, That being the only way to experience his Generosity.

This Year has been fignalized with much Action in Flanders, Catalonia, and Italy. The Field was shared among many brave Generals.

The Duke of Orleans had the Command of the Army in Flonders, where he took the Forts of Vandreval, Bourbough, Link, Dringben, Bethuney S. Venant, Guisca, Lens, Mardyke, Lillers, Mening, and Armentiers.

These Places were won by several Parties, under the Command of the Mareschals de Gestion, de Rantzau, and the Duke of Guise, who all acted in separate Bodies, under the Duke of Orleans.

Nor was the Count & Harcourt idle in Catalonia, where he succeeded in the Charge of the Maresthal de la Mothe. The first Effort of his Arms was the retaking of Agramont, which the Spaniards had seized, a strong City, and which kept a large part of Catalonia in Subjection.

From hence he marched towards Roses, one of the most important Places for Strength under the Spanish King's Dominions, and governed by an experienced Soldier, who failed not to defend the Place to the last Extremes, but after a Siege of two Moonsy was compell'd to yield for want of Passisions.

D. 6

After a

60 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

After this, the French General cut off seven hundred Spaniards, who were posted to hinder his Passage over the River. The next Day the whole Armies meeting in the Plains of Liorens, there was a furious Encounter, in which the Spaniards lost ten Regiments of Horse on the Spot; the rest threw down their Arms and yielded. The Marquis of Mortare, one of the Spanish Generals, was taken Captive with other Persons of Note; among which was the Standard-Bearer of Spain.

Yet this was but the Engagement of one Wing. For when the other entered the Combat, the Slaughter was dreadful. Of the Spaniards were flain Six thousand Horse, and Sixteen hundred Foot; and three and Twenty hundred of them were made Prisoners. The French lost not above Three hundred in all, and they had but a few wounded.

This Battle has brought infinite Glory to the Count d'Harcourt. After which there happened nothing remarkable in Catalonia, fave the taking of Balaguier, which is like to end this Year's Campaign on that Side.

Prince Thomas of Savey commanded in Italy, but had no great Number of French in his Army. the main Body being drawn off to serve in Catalonia. Yet vexed to fee the Success of the Spaniards, who had possessed themselves of a strong. Cattle, and kept the Field in a Bravada, as if he were not able to face them; he raifed some Recruits, and enter'd the Milanez, where he took the City and Castle of Vigevano. After this, defigning to return into Piedmont, he found all the Passages block'd up by the Spaniards, who had a far greater Army than his. Yet assuming Courage, he attempted to pass the River, Moura; and the Enemy presenting themselves to oppose his. Design, he gave them Battle, and killed Five hundred. hundred and threescore of them; among which were nine Officers of principal Command and Quality: On his fide were lost Two hundred common Soldiers, and twelve Officers; among which was his Brother Prince Maurice of Savey. These are the chief Actions on that Side. As for Portugal, there has happened nothing in that Kingdom worthy of Remark.

I have in this Letter, fage Governour of the Imperial City, observed the Method thou enjoynedst me; I have acquainted thee, with whatsoever has occurred in the present Wars of France and Spain during this Year;

"Tis discoursed here, that the Vinetians will lay Siege to Canea next Spring, in hopes to recover that important Place from the Arms of the victorious Ottomans.

The Duke of Orleans will be on his March to Flanders towards the latter end of the next Moon, resolving to make an early Campaign, being a larm'd with the late Loss of Mardyke, which the Spaniards took by Surprize, without much Bloodshed, having not the fourth part of a hundred Men killed on their Side. Whereas, when the French took it from them, it cost five thousand Lives of the best Soldiers the King of France had in his Army.

The Hour of the Post will not permit me to fay more, than that I am the humblest of thy Slaves.

Paris, 14th of the 12th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LET-

LETTER XVIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

Will not make Tryal of the Virtue of Friendthip at this Time, in the Way that Philosophers propose to be used between such as own that Title. I will not complain of the Dolors I undergo, that so by making thy Compassion share them with me, I may ease my self of a Part. It appears to me a pufillanimous, if not an unjust Action, for a Man to transfer his Sufferings by discovering 'em to his Friend, and delignedly throw that upon another, which is scarce tolerable to himself.

I am fick, and Custom has rendered this almost as natural to me as Health. My Constitution is not Proof against the envenom'd Arrows. that are shot from the Stars. Nor am I constellated, to refift the fecret Contagions that lurk in the Elements. The Herbage of the Field languishes, when poison'd with invisible Atoms. from above; and all the Leaves of the Forest wither, when touched with the baneful Emissions of cortain Meteors, or scorched with the winged Exhalations of the Night. So our Bedies receive a thousand Impressions from Things without us, and not a few Maladies from our selves. The very Channel of Life proves many Times the Vehicle of Death, while our Lungs fuck in. unwholesome Airs, and our very Breath becomes our Bane. We have radical Poisons in our Complexions, which though they do us no hurt, while we let them lie dormant, yet once excited by our Passions and Vices, they become noxious and fatal, hurrying us into the Chambers of Death. Death, by unaccountable Difeases, and Pains which are under no Predicament.

This makes me bear my present Distemper with an equal Mind, because I know its Original, and 'tis not in the List of those Maladies which have no Name; whereby I can easily calculate its Duration, and almost point a Day when I shall be well again. For 'tis in the Number of those, Physicians call Acus; and the Anguish it inslicts confirms that Title.

Take not this for a Complaint, nor what I am about to fay for a Paradox, when I tell thee, That I know not which is greater, my Pleasure or Pain, during this excruciating Fever. These: Afflictions border to near upon one another, that I find it difficult to diftinguish them. They seem , to be Inmates to each other, and blended together in their Roots. Sure I am, they are fo twifled and interwoven in my Constitution, that I. never felt one without the other. Every Man may experience, that his strongest Defires are compounded of these two Passions, and the very Moment of Fruition itself, cannot separate them. The Minute of Enjoyment is but conferrated. to his Loss, while the Heighth of his Joy is the Rife of his Grief, fince the smallest Particle of Time cannot diffinguish the Life and Death of his Pleafure.

Do but reverse this Consemplation, and apply is to my Sickness, and thou wilt find no Riddle in my Words, when I affaire thee, that as the Torment of my Fever advances, so does my Ease; Pleasure and Pain sit and shake Hands in my Heart, embrace, and equally divide its Systola and Diastole between them.

Yet I must needs own, I am indebted for this Allay of my Dolors, to the Presence of my Mind, which I suffer not to be torn from itself.

or carried away by the violent Motion of my agitated Spirits. Were it not for this, a Fener would prove a Hell upon Earth, and every Pulse a tormenting Fury. My very Drink (which is all my Subfiftence now) would appear but the loathsome Distillation of that Tree, whose unpalatable and scalding Gum, is appointed for a Beverage to the Damned. The softest Entertainment of my Bed, while awake, would but be a Translation of the Torments of Ixion and Sifyphus; and the flattering Intervals of Sleep, would but renew the Sufferings of Tantalus. Whereas now, whether asleep or awake, my Mind keeping aloft in her proper Sphere, busied in the Contemplation and Enjoyment of her self and superiour Objects, partakes not in the Fever of my Body, but as if on the cool top of some high Mountain, surveys all the Valleys beneath, without being sensible of their raging Heats.

I owe this Tranquillity, in the midst of bodily. Perturbations, to the Examples of ancient Philosophers, which thou knowest have far more Instuence than Precepts. Ever since I read that Plotinus could chase away the racking Tortures of the Gout and Stone, by the sole Force of his Thought, I daily try'd the Experiment, spurred on my Emulation of his Virtue; as judging it ignoble in a Mussulman to give the Palm to a Pagan in any Point of masculine Brayery.

"Tis recorded of the same Philosopher, that by the mere Strength and Majesty of his Mind, he dissipated the Enchantments of Apollonius Tyanæus; and the infernal Spirits confess d they were baffled by that thinking Man: As if his Soul were of the Nature of Medusa's Head, which turn'd all into unactive Statues, who did but look on it.

Surely, great is the Efficacy of Contemplation, hinted at in the Arabian Proverb, which says, He He that can see his own Eges without a Glass, shall be able to move the Bulls Horns. Which mysterious Expression is thus interpreted by the learned Acicen. A Prophet or Spiritual Man, who always converses within, shall have Power to shake the Foundations of the Earth; which, thou knowest, ress on the Horns of a Bull, according to the Doctrine of the Holy Law-giver.

I need fay no more to convince thee, that I am in a Fever. My thus expatiating and running from one thing to another (when I thought to have faid all in a few Words) will fatisfy thee what Temper I am in. Yet recollecting my self with Comfort that I know my Distemper, I will crave Leave to tell thee a short Story of a Man who was sick for many Years, and yet the ablest Physicians in Paris, could not discern his Malady.

This Person was an Officer of the City, whose Bufiness 'twas to arrest Men that were in Debt. He was observed to be the subtlest of all his Brethren, and the most dextrous at plotting another Man's Ruin. This augmented his Estate, and he grew extremely rich. But in the one and fortieth Year of his Age, he was seized with an unknown Malady, a Diftemper to which the most skilful were Strangers. He languished five Years in a Condition which moved all Men to Pity. It will be tedious for to recount the Symptoms of his Illness. At length he died; and according to his own Will was diffected. Physicians found all Parts of his Body decayed 4 and wasted; but when they came to his Head, (they were above measure assonished to see a Nest of Serpents instead of Brains. This was concluded by all to be the Source of his Diftemper: and People descant variously on it. Some say, twas a Judgment of God inflicted on him, for his eruel Subtilty, in trapanning Men out of their Liberties

66 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

Liberties by a thousand Wiles. Others are of Opinion, that it is a natural Product, it being usual in some Constitutions, for this sort of Creature to be bred out of their Vitals. A Merchant that had been in Peru told me, that in a Province of that Empire, there were People, who by drinking the Water of a certain River, had Serpents often engendred in their Bowels; that he had seen one presented to the King of Spain which was taken out of a dead Man's Heart, a Cubit in length. He said 'twas of a crimson Colour, without Scales or Eyes; neither was it venomous. This he asserted very solemnly, and with Imprecations.

I tell thee, dear Friend, if these Things betrue, who can be sure he harbours not some such leathsome Inmate in his Body; yet I would not have thee grow melancholy upon it, and disturb thy Repose. The Day will come, when we shall all be metamorphosed into Worms and Serpents in the Grave.

In the mean while live thou happily, in the Favour of thy Sovereign, in the Enjoyment of thy Health, the Vigour of thy Sonfes, and have formatimes in thy Thoughts a Man full of Infirmities, without murmuring, Mahmut, that loves his. Friend in all Conditions.

Paris, 26th of the 12th Moons, of the Year, 1645.

LET.

LETTER XIX.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword Bearer to bis Highness.

Wish I could time my Letters so, as to gratify all the Ministers of the blessed Port, by making each alternately, the first Relater of some acceptable News in the anysterious Divan, where all Human Events are scanned with impartial Judgment. But every Moon does not present us with Sieges or Battles; neither can I receive Intelligence of all remarkable Events, so soon as they come to pass. What I shall now transmit to thee, is an Account of what has been omitted in my Difpatches to the other Ministers.

Europe is a Field, fertile in Rebellions, Tumults,. Disorders, and unnatural Wars. No Part of Chriflendom, which is not polluted with Treasons, Perfidies, and Maffacres; no Corner undefiled with humane Blood. The Son conspires the Death of him who first gave him his Life. The Brother lays Trains to ensnare the Partner of his Blood, the Off-spring of her that bare himself. No Bond of Affection or Tye of Confanguinity, is of Force to restrain these Infidels from pursuing each other with Malice. Neither has their Religion any more Influence on their Passions, than the Fables of the ancient Poets. In publick and private, all things are governed by Interest. Thus while every Man and every State, are only byass'd by the narrow Principles of Self Preservation; they abandon the general Good of Christendom, and expose it as a Prey to the next daring Invader.

Theres

the Faith free from Blemife.

Yet fince the Depredations which the Swedishave made in Germany and Denmark, the neighbouring Crowns and States, notwithstanding their Infincerity, have seemingly interposed their Endeavours, to prevent the worst Effects of a War, so destructive to the common Interest of Christendom. Deputies were sent from all Parts, to Mansser and Osnaburgh, with Instructions from their respective Sovereigns. They have squandered away much time in vain Overtures of Peace; whilst the Swedes daily get Ground on one side of the Empire and the French are not unsuccessful on the other.

The Enemies of France, sensible that they camnot reduce this Crown by open Force, have Resourse to Artifice. They endeavour to corrupt her Allies, and infinuate into the Minds of the Luited States of the Low-Gountries, all those Apprehensions which may serve to improve the Jealousy they had already conceived of the French Neighbourhood. Suggesting that the Spanish Netberlands are the only Bar which stops the Armies of France from over-running Holland, and the rest of the United Provinces. In sine, they have prevailed on them to enter into a separate Alliance, and not to treat in Conjunction with the Ministers at Munster.

On the other fide, the French, by their Agents in Holland, endeavour to unmask the Artifice of the Spaniards; representing that they have no other Defign in these Infinuations

but .

but to breed an ill understanding between this Crown and the United Provinces, that so by their Il Offices, in Time Things may come to a Rupture, and the States be deprived of the Friendship and Protection of France, which alone is able to support that Commonwealth, against the Pretensions of their old Enemies, the Spaniards. All Europe is aftonish'd to see, that notwithstanding the utmost Condescensions of the French Court to conserve Peace, yet the States, led by their ill Destiny, should embrace the Proposals of Spain. This makes a great Impression on all the Ministers affembled at Munster and Osnaburgh, who now conclude, that the Spaniards only feek Occasions to perpetuate the War in Europe; that whilst the Princes of the Empire are engaged in a Defence of their Territories, and the Swedes and French are busied in pursuing their Conquests, they may pick a Quarrel with their new Friends, whom they have deprived of a more powerful Protection, and reestablish themselves in the revolted Provinces.

The Deputies have had feveral Conferences about this important Affair; and the Refult of their Counsels, is to solicite the French Court, to use its utmost Power to prevent the ill Consequences which this separate Treaty will bring along with it.

'Tis discoursed here, that Monsieur de la Tuillerie will be recalled from the Court of Swedeland, being esteem'd the fittest Man to dissuade the Hollanders from this new Alliance; he having been already employed in several Negotiations with the States, and is well vers'd in the Methods of treating with that Nation.

This forme judge to be the Reason of the Sieur Chanur's being sent to Swedeland, that he may reside at Stockholm, and continue to ast there in the Absence of la Tuillerie.

Şo

70 LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

So nice and delicate in this Affair, that all France cannot afford another Man duly qualified, to manage it with any Probability of Success. If he shew not more Candour in this Negociation, than he did when he was fent to mediate a Peace between Swedeland and Denmark, he will receive but slender Thanks at his Return. But if he succeeds, 'tis said, That Cardinal Mazarini has declared, he will merit to be install'd in the Order of the Holy Spirit. I have formerly spoke of this in one of my Letters, as the most eminent Order of Knight-bood in France.

I wish the Christians may ever find Difficulties to obstruct the Measures they take to establish an universal Peace, and may continue to amuse and vex one another, 'till the Day of the Scourge.

Paris, 20th. of the 1st Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER, XX.

To the Reis Effendi, Principal Secretary to the Ottoman Empire.

IT is not yet publickly known what Defigns have moved this Court to order a mighty Fleet to be fitted out to Sea: But it is privately whifper'd, that they will fail to the Levant, to affift the Venetians against the Turks.

People discourse variously, according to the Strength or Weakness of their Reason; and Five Days ago an old Man went to Cardinal Mazarini, pretending to speak by Inspiration: He told him, That 'twas in vain to trust to their winged winged Castles, (so he called the Ships) the Multitude of their Armies, or in the Treasures of their Money; for a Decree was fign'd in Heaven against all the Nations in Europe; that the War was begun above, between the Potentates who have the Custody of Kingdoms and Empires; that they should soon fee the Banner of the Eternal display'd in the Firmament; that the Stars should fight in their Courses, against the wicked Professors of Christianity; that the Ismaelites should come out of their Holes, and should flow down like a Torrent from the Mountains of the East, over-running all Christendom. In fine, that Germany, France, Italy, and Spain, should be laid desolate, their beautiful Cities fack'd and the Inhabitants led into Captivity, that the Pope, with all his Priefts, should be exterminated; and, that all Nations should embrace one Law.

They put him in Prison, but he was found walking next Day in the Streets. The Keeper chain'd him in Irons, but in the Morning he was standing at the Gate of the Prison, preaching to the People. Some say he is a Chymist, and has found out the Master-Secret; others say, He is a Prophet; but most judge him to be a Magician. He seems now to have loft his Vigour, not being able to release himself from the Chains, which fasten him to the Ground where he lies, yet he continues to foretel the Ruin of Christendom. 'Tis said he will be sent to Rome, there to receive Sentence of the Holy Father, according to his Demerits. I am no Admirer of Visionaries; yet there appears something extraordinary in the Constancy of this Man. Time will demonstrate, whether he be a true or a false Prophet.

A Courtier came to this City last Night from Swedeland, who brings Letters from Monsieur Chanut, which say, that he has received great Encouragement

Digitized by Google

ragement to hope for the Ships which he was to buy in Swedeland. Thou hast already heard, that Monsieur la Tuillerie, Ambassador from this Crown to Queen Christina, was thought the only proper Instrument to dissuade the United States of the Low Countries, from entring into a separate Treaty with Spain; and that therefore Monsieur Chanut was sent to reside in his Absence at Stockholm, to observe what passes and to continue the Alliante between the two Crowns.

This Minister arrived in Swedeland, the 15th Day of the Moon of December, in the last Year: where Monsieur la Tuillerie, had prepared all things ready for a speedy Dispatch of his Negotiation: having the Day before his Arrival made known to that Court the Pleasure of the King of France, and the Queen Regent, whose Letters were receiv'd by Queen Christina, with all the Marks of Royal Affection; she telling the Ambassador, that she infinitely honoured the Persons of the King and the Queen Regint; and, that she would give them such Proofs of the Integrity of her Friendship, as would demonstrate, That she was sensible of her Obligations to them, for what they had contributed to the good Success of her Affairs: And that there was nothing more dear to her, nor more fixed in her Resolution, than to conserve inviolably the League that was between them. She farther told the Ambassadors, that it was with no ordinary Complacency the now beheld two Ministers of France in her Court, after she had been without any for a long Time. In fine, she assured them, That whatsoever could be spared from the necesfary Defence and Service of the Kingdom, whether Ships, Arms or Men, should not be wanting to the Aid of the King of France.

By this thou mayest perceive, That though the King of France has powerful Armies by Land, yet he is defective in Naval Forces: Or, if he has Ships enough to defend his own Realms by Sea, and to ferve as Convoys to his Merchants, it must be concluded, that some foreign Expedition is design'd, which has put him upon this extraordinary Method to encrease his Fleet.

yet

I thought it highly necessary to acquaint thee with this Passage, that the Ministers of the Port. august and ever happy, may consult what Meafures to take with this Prince, if it be true, That he defigns to break the League which he made with Sultan Ibrahim four Years ago. There is but little Confidence to be reposed in the most solemn Oaths of Christian Monarchs, who hold not themfelves obliged to keep Faith with those whom they esteem Infidels; and, thou knowest, that is the best Title they can afford the Observers of the most perfect Law in the World. Yet the French. among all the Nations of the Messias, seem to bear the greatest Respect to the Ottoman Empire. But they are inconstant and changeable, which is an Argument of Infincerity. They are very prompt and warm in contracting Friendships, and as ready to infringe those sacred Bonds, on the least Occafion, especially where interest and Ambition have the Ascendant.

The Venetian Resident at this Court makes daily Visits to the Queen Regent, and has frequent Conferences with Cardinal Mazarini. Many Couriers pass between Munster, Stockholm, and this City. Yesterday one arrived from the Venetian Ambasfador at Munster, giving an Account that the Secretary of that Embasy, whom he had sent to Queen Christina, was return'd with the Promise of eight Ships of War, lent by the Queen to the Republick, to assist them against the All conquering Mussuman.

Digitized by Google

74 LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

It seems as if Sweden were become the common Arsenal of Europe, from which the other Kingdoms are supply'd with all the Instruments of War. But what is most observable, is, that the Venetians obtain'd not this Favour, without the Mediation of the French Ministers at Stockbolm. By which it seems evident, that this Court has newly enter'd into a private League with the Republick; and that they design to surprize the Ottomans with some sudden Enterprize by Sea.

I shall not let a Moment escape, which may present me with the least Opportunity, to discover what is in the Hearts of the Infidels.

If thou wilt favour me with thy Instructions, I shall make the safer Steps. God, whose Eye penetrates into all Obscurities, enlighten us with a Ray to that Wisdom, which once revealed to his Messeger the secret Conspiracy of the Corei's when they plotted to destroy the Temple built without Hands.

Paris, 17th of the 2d Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXI.

70 William Vospel, a Recluse at Halmerstadt in Austria.

Received thy Letter with abundance of Complacency, in that it argues the Continuance of thy Friendship; and that I trace therein no Footsteps of an angry Pen, notwithstanding the Liberty I took to descant on thy manner of Life. On the contrary, thou sendess me an Apology logy full of Meeknefs. Thy Reasons have a marvellous Force in them; they seem to spring from a Soul vegete and living, and yet dead to Passion. Thou almost persuadest me to affect a manastick Life, which may not unfitly be term'd a sociable Solitude.

I much admire what thou say'st concerning Silence, and wish I could practise that passive Vertue. It is the first Step of Wisdom, the Nurse of Peace, and the Guardian of Vertue. Words do but russe and discompose the Mind, betraying the Soul to a thousand Vanities. Therefore Pythagoras enjoyn'd his Disciples five Years Silence, before he admitted them to his mysterious

Philosophy,

But tell me why thou didft not rather chuse to live in a Defart remote from Men, where thou wouldst have no Temptation to speak, unless thou wert disposed to hold a Conference with the Trees or Breafts, or hadft a mind to sport thy felf, and have thy Words retorted by mocking Echo's? If a Recluse Life be thy Choice, for the fake of Contemplation. I would advise thee to turn Hermit. But perhaps thou darest not venture thy felf among the Satyrs of the Wildernejs, or thou art afraid of the Wild Beafts. As for the first, they are either the Dreams of Poets; or if there be any fuch Beings in reality, they will not hurt thee, fince thou voluntarily forfakest the Company of Men, to become a Sylvan, as they are. As for the latter, I must confess, I cannot discommend thy Fear, there being no Friendship or Intelligence common between us and the Lyons, Tygers, Bears, &c. of the Forest. Yet I can tell thee for thy Comfort, that by long and assiduous Practice, the siercest of these Creatures have been taught to converse with Men, to obey their Commands, and to perform E 2

Digitized by Google

76 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

the Parts of diligent Servants, and faithful

Friends.

This Wilderness will afford thee a fair Opportunity of studying the Natures of Plants and Animals, the various Alterations in the Elements, the Influence of the Winds and Rains, Meteors and Exhalations, with many other Secrets which are hid from the greatest part of Men, who are buried alive in populous Towns and Cities, banish'd from the Familiarity of their Mother Earth, and most of her genuine Products.

In the Dejart, the unforced Harmony of Birds shall lull thy Soul in innocent and grateful Slumbers; the gentle Winds shall wast immortal Whispers to thy ravish'd Ears, breathing unutterable Sounds from Paradise. The murmuring Streams shall warble forth their soft and sweet eternal Stories. All shall conspire to serve thy Contemplation, and to transport thy Mind with Sacred Ecstasies.

If after all this thou shalt prefer the monastick Enclosure, follow thy Resolution, and be happy. Only remember, That though thy Body be shut up within those Walls, yet if thy Mind straggle in vain and worldly Thoughts, thou art no longer a Recluse. Adieu.

Paris, 25th of the 2d Moon, of the Year 1646.

LET-

LETTER XXII.

To the Captain Bassa.

IF all be true that I have Reason to suspect, thou wilt find a warm Divertisement at Sea this Spring. Though the Europeans have seem'd flow in their Preparations to affift the State of Venice, fuffering their separate Interests to supersede the Care of that Republick, yet now they turn their Eyes thither. Their Backwardness hitherto is owing to the Secrecy with which our fage Emperor meditated the present War. His Counsels were never whisper'd out of the Seraglio, 'till the fame Winds transported the News, which wasted our invincible Fleet to the Shore of Candy. Now they behold the Ocean cover'd with the Ships of the Eastern Empire, Fear surprizes them; the Princes of the Nazarenes tremble. They look no longer on the Republick of Venice with the Eyes of Envy, because of her Preheminence in Traffick. but with another Regard: They confider her as the Bulwark of Christendom, the only Bank of which has hitherto stemm'd the Tide of the Ottoman Puissance, and stopp'd our victorious Armies from overflowing all Europe.

I have informed the Reis Effendi, of what I knew concerning the naval Forces which are fitting out in several Parts of the North and West, to aid the Venetians; but I have not told him what the Christians say of thee, neither am I willing to believe it. They speak of thee, as of a Man not more difficult to be corrupted, than was thy Predecessor, who was strangled by the Order of the Sultaness Mother. This Censure, I hope, is an Effect of their Impotence; while E 3

78 LETTERS Writ by Vol. III.

they flatter themselves with the Imagination of bribing him, from whose Courage and Fortune they can expect nothing but Defeats.

They trust much in the Force of thy Birth and Education, and discourse of a certain magical Character, imprinted on thy Soul, when thou wast baptized, which, they say, is indelible: and they promise themselves, that thy native Christianity has more Instructed on thy Heart, then forced Circumcisson; and that thou wilt not sight with any Zeal, against Men of the same Principle, as those who gave thee thy Breath. But they conside more in the Charms of their Gold, with which they design to brile thee. In sine, they drank Healths to the Hones Renagado. So they term him, who commands the whole Fleet of the Ottoman Empire.

I do not give Credit to these Calumnies, having good grounds to boast of thy Integrity. However, I counsel thee, by some extraordinary Service to thy Master, to give the Lye to these Instidels: And suffer not that, which at present may be but a bare Suspicion, to be improved by thy Neglect or Cowardice, into a palpable Evidence that, thou art salse and persidious to the Supreme Lord of the Globe.

Paris, 6th of the 3d Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXIII.

To Adonai, a Jew at Venice.

TOW thou art fix'd, 'tis time to write to thee. Thou hast been a Rambler these three or sour Years, and no Body knew where to sind thee. I have received eleven Dispatches from thee, since thy first Departure from Geneua; wherein thou hast informed me of many Passages of State. Now I desire thee to send me some Remarks of the different Nature of the People thou hast seen, their various Customs and Laws with whatsoever was worthy Observation it thy Travels.

Italy is a fair Field, yet produces Darnel as well as wholesome Corn. It is a beautiful Garden, yet bears Aconite intermix'd with her Roses: Great Virtues, and no less Vices. This Region is famous for the Wildom of its Inhabitants, and for their Proverbs: It is the Arabia of Europe, in many Senses: vet much lessen'd in its own Renown, since the Decline of the Roman Empire. The Goths and Vandals turned all into Defarts where they came, and have left fuch Impressions of their Northern Barbarism behind them, as made the People they conquer'd half Savages. Hence came the general Decay of Learning and Knowledge in these Western Parts: Hence the Corruption of ancient Man-The Great, the Noble, and the Wise, bowed under the Yoke of their New Masters, learn'd their Fashions, and gloried in their Shame. Their Examples influenced the Vulgar; Debauchery became modifh and authentick. Thus a general Depravation of pristine Integrity took place, and Men became vicious by a Law.

E 4 Neither

LETTERS Writ by Vol.III.

Neither has Wickedness planted it felf only in Europe: The Sea could not flop this boundless Evil. Asia is infected also, and the Vice of Italy is transported to the Empire of the true Believers. Thou hast seen all the chief Cities between the Alps and Rhegium, which is the utmost Angle of Italy, to the South: Tell me, whether Sodom could exceed any of them in Licentiousness: We will not except even Rome, the Seat of the Christian Mufti. These Uncircumcised have learned of thy Nation, to call the ancient Philosophers, Infidels But had any of those Sages lived to see the Abominations of the modern Nazareans, they would have despised the Faith which produced no better Works.

Adonai, put in Practice the Import of thy Name. be Lord of thy felf; and if thou stumblest at the Light of the Muffulmans, walk in that of Moles, but shun the Paths of the Christians; for they are enveloped in Darkness, and grope at Mid-day. Live according to Reason, and thou shalt be happy. Adien.

Paris, 18th of the 3d Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXIV.

To Mustapha, Berber Aga.

HE present War of Candy is like to render that Island as much the Subject of the World's Discourse, as it was formerly famous, for being the Gradle of Jupiter. In those Days it was called Crete, much celebrated in the Writings of the Greek Poets. Afterwards it became became a Province of the Roman Empire; then of the Grecians; next it submitted to the Saracens. But in the Time of the Christian Expeditions in Palestine, when Baldwin Earl of Flanders was crown'd Emperor of Constantinople, this Island came into his Possession, which he gave to a certain valiant Commander in his Army, a Man of a noble Descent, of whom the Venetians purchased it; and in their Hands it has continued ever since. But now, in all probability, it will be the Prize of Arms which nothing sublunary can resist.

The Posts from Italy and the Sea Coasts of this Kingdom confirm each others News; all agreeing, That notwithstanding the utmost Efforts of the Venetians and Candiots, to hinder the Relief of Canea, yet our General is got into that Haven with vast Quantities of Provisions, and a sufficient Reinforcement of Men. They add, that Forty Thousand of our Soldiers have made a Descent in another Part of the Island, have gain'd the Forts of Cifternes Colmi, and Bicorno, and were on their March towards Suda, with a Design to befiege that Place. They accuse our General of barbarous Cruelty, in that he caused Five of the principal Noblemen of that Kingdom to be put to Death, because they refused to betray their Country, or enter into the Interests of the Grand Signier.

I must confess, magnificent Aga, that whatever may be said in Commendation of this Geneneral's Policy, and Fidelity to his Master; it is no Argument of the Goodness of his Disposition. I rather admire the Temper of the Duke of Orleans, who, when Graveling was surrendred to him, just as he enter'd the Town, was heard to say these Words; Let us endeavour, by generous Actions, to voin the Hearts of all Men; so may we hope E for a daily Victory. Let the French learn from mes this new Way of Conquest, to subdue Men by Mercy and Clemency.

These are heroic Sentiments, and agree well with the Character of this Prince, who is faid never to have been the Author of any Man's Death, nor to have revenged himself of any Injury; yet a valiant Soldier, an expert Commander, and no bad Politician.

It is not hid from the Court, with what a matchless Virtue he dismiss'd a Gentleman that was hired to murder him. This Affaffin was suffer'd to pass into the Duke's Bed-Chamber one Morning early, pretending Business of great Moment from the Queen. As foon as the Duke caft his Eyes on him, he spoke thus; I know thy Business, Friend; thou art sent to take away my Life: What burt have I done thee? It is now in my Power, with a Word, to have thee cut in Pieces before my Face. But I pardon thee; go thy way, and see my Face no more.

The Gentleman, stung with his own Guilt, and astonish'd at the excellent Nature of this Prince, fell on his Knees, confess'd his Design, and who employ'd him: And having promised eternal Gratitude for this Royal Favour, departed without any other Notice taken of him; andfearing to tarry in France, enter'd himself into the Service of the Spanish King. It was his Fortune afterwards to encounter the Duke of Orleans. in a Battel in Flanders. The Duke, at this Instant. was oppressed with a Croud of Germans who surrounded him, and, in the Conflict, he loft his Sword. Which this Gentleman perceiving, nim-, bly stepp'd to him, and deliver'd one into the Duke's Hands, faying withal, Now reap the Fruit of thy former Clemency. Thou gavest me my Life, now I put thee in a Capacity to defend thy own. The Prince.

Prince, by this means, at length escaped the Danger he was in; and that Day the Fortune of War was on his side. The French had a considerable Victory.

Thou feeft by this, that heroick Actions have fomething divine in them, and attract the Favours of Heaven. No Man ever was a loser by good Works; for tho, he be not presently rewarded, yet in Tract of Time some happy Emergency or other arises to convince him, That vertuous Men are the Darlings of Providence.

Thou that art near the Person of the Grand Signior, may'st find an Opportunity to relate this Story to him, which may make no unprofitable Impression on his Mind. Princes ever stand in need of faithful Monitors.

Adieu, great Minister, and favour Mahmut with the Continuance of thy Protection and Friendship.

Paris, 25th of the 3d Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXV.

To Nassuf, Bassa of Natolia.

Received thy Letter as an Argument of the Continuance of that Friendship which was between us, when we lived together in the Seraglio. Since that time thou and I have been employed abroad, in different Services of our august Emperor, who has now rewarded thy Fidelity with a Command; which if it be not adequate to thy Merit; is nevertheless agreeable to the Wishes.

E 6 I con

I congratulate thy Honour, and wish thee a gradual Increase of it; for sudden and violent Leaps are dangerous. But our glorious Sultan discovers his Abilities in nothing more eminently, than in adapting Places of Trust to the Deserts and Capacities of his faithful Slaves. So that if he should in Time think fit to exalt thee to the highest Dignity in the State, we might from the Choice of so wife a Prince presage thee a better Fortune than befel one of thy Name, in the Reign of Sultan Achmut III. who from a Slave fold in the Market for three Sequins, was advanced to an Honour too weighty for his Virtue; being made Vizir Azem, and Lord of the most delicious Province in Afia. But being ambitious of absolute Sovereignty, he plotted Treason against his Master, which being discover'd, the fatal Firm was fign'd, and all his Defigns were stifled with a Bow-ftring.

By this thou may'st comprehend, how necessary it is for Princes not to over-load any Man with Dignities, beyond the Proportion of his Humility and Faithfulness. Yet Rewards well placed, give new Vigour to the Endeavours of a Slave, whereas when good Services are flighted, it does but quench the Ardour with which they were perform'd. Few Men are so spiritual, as to do great and heroick Things, purely for the fake of internal Complacency. And I doubt not but the Decii themselves, in so freely facrificing their Lives for their Country, had Regard to human Glory. Even Seneca, whom one would take for the most mortify'd Stoick of that Age by his Writings, yet is conceived to have found more Encouragement in the Treasures of Gold, with which Nero's Bounty had fill'd his Coffers, than all his Morals, of which he had such refigned Septiments, and elegant Expressions. What

What I have faid, thou hast Wisdom enough to apply to thy self, without being vain-glorious: Let those whom thou employest in any meritorious Services, and who discharge their Trust well, be encouraged with the same Proportions of Bounty. Muniscence will not only add to thy Glory, but also advance thy Interest, since thou wilt ever have Occasion for thy Slaves: And he who has once tasted thy Liberality as a Reward for any eminent Performance, had he no other Motive than the Pleasure of renewing so profitable an Experiment, will freely hazard his Life to serve thee in an Extremity.

This Method thou wilt find of no small Use to thee, in the Wars to which thou art going, where it will be necessary for thee to recompence the least singular Bravery of the meanest Soldier, not only with Applause, but with some Preferment in the Army. This will not only prove a Spur to others, but even to the Person so rewarded; and put him upon new Essorts of Courage, to attract the Byes of his munificent General. This will be the way for thee, in time, to have an Army composed all of Captains, or Men qualified for such.

Yet let not this diminish the Severity of that Discipline, which is requisite to retain a prosperous Army in their Obedience. I counsel thee to be strict in requiring the least military Duty, and industrious in performing thy own Part, which will be an Example to the rest; yet rather be forward to lead in Labours, than in Dangers: In regard thou wilt be more serviceable in a Battle, by thy Counsels and Orders, than by personally entering the Combat. In all Things preser the Welfare of the Ottoman Empire, to whatsoever else is most dear to thee, even to thy own Honour, which yet ought to be dearer to thee than thy Life.

If thou thinkest I have taken too much Liberty to advise thee, accuse thy self for having honour'd me with thy Friendship, which admits of no Reserves in Conversation.

Paris, 7th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER. XXVI.

To the Kaimacham.

T is a vast Disappointment to the Venetians that our General in Candy has so opportunely revictuall'd Canea and increas'd the Garrison there. Morifini is blam'd for this, by those that wish him no Good: What will not envy suggest, when it beholds a Man on the Top of Honour? This General, to give an Enemy his Due, is a Man of Spirit and true Fortitude; neither courting, nor fhunning Dangers in the Service of his Country & but when once engaged in Perils for that Cause. he is fearless as a Lion. If he has not hitherto had Occasion to give the State so desperate a Proof of Loyalty, as once did the Roman Curtius (who bravely gallop'd into the bottomless Chasm to pacify their angry Gods;) yet he has often demonstrated, that his Courage and Fidelity come not short of the ancient Heroes. In a Word, he has done too much for the Republik of Venice, to efcape the Spleen of other Grandees. All must be Generals, or the War will not prosper. Each Man's Ambition dictates this to the State, that a Man of Conduct would foon expel the Turks out of that Island: Thus in his Conceit, laying a Train for his own Promotion.

Would'I

Would'st thou know Morosini's Crime, that excites all this Passion? To speak the Truth, it was an Overfight advantagious to the Ottomans. He put out with his whole Fleet to Sea, and lest the Port of Canea open. By which means, three of our Ships got in with Plenty of Provisions. So that the Town is now in a Condition to fustain a long Siege, and the Venetians despair of ever recovering it. Yet Morisini has made so plaufible an Apology, that the Senate have acquitted him, not judging it confistent either with Juflice or their Interest, to suffer one Miscarriage. the Effect of a fair Intention, to out-weigh his numerous Mérits and Services. For, the Occasion of his thus suddenly abandoning the Avenue of that Haven, was, to chase some of our Vessels, then under Sail, not many Leagues off; and the taking of those Vessels, on Board of which were abundance of Slaves, justified to the Senate the Truth of his Pretensions. However, there are - not wanting such as say, he held a private Correspondence with our General: Others, that the present Governour of Canea has formerly taken Captive at Sea a Son of Marifini's, whom he now offer'd to restore, in tase he would withdraw his Ships from before the Haven for a few Days. I know not how far this may be credited. But 'tis a certain Truth that Morifini has his Son again, and he defended himself by pleading, that he redeem'd him by exchanging a Mobometan Captive of equal Quality, whom he had aboard his Ship.

And thou knowest, that this manner of Barter is lawful in War. Adonas the Jew sends me this Intelligence, and I dare believe him. For since the Instructions I sent him to Genoua, he has taken care to ascertain his Reports. I wish is were as true, that Morisini could be prevailed on to accept the Friendship of the sublime Port. But the Character of that General gives me no Encouragement to hope for so fortunate a Treachery, from his severe Virtue.

no

However, I will hope and believe, that the eternal Patron of true Believers, will give such a happy Issue to the Ottoman Arms in Candy, and all other Parts, as shall dispose the Nazarenes that remain unconquer'd, to honour HIM whom they have hitherto despised and blasphemed; even the Prophet, who could neither write nor read.

Paris, 7th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXVII.

To Cara Hali, a Physician at Constantinople.

HE Time of the Year is now come, wherein the Earth turns her infide out, and Nature calls forth the hidden Virtues of that Element, to grace the World with an infinite Variety of pleasant Forms and Colours. The Eye is lost in fuch a Crowd of different Beauties, and every Senfe is ravish'd with delightful Objects. The young Men and Virgins throng the Fields, to behold the Refurrection of Flowers and Herbs; and the Old feel new Vigour springing in their Bodies, as though they had been in Medea's Cauldron. Even Mabmut himself who has droop'd all the Winter, now begins to lift up his Head, and partake in the common Restauration of all Things.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS.

If I am capable of gueffing at the Occasion of my frequent Sickness, I believe it may in part be attributed to the want of fresh Air, in the place where I lodge. There is a vast Difference between the Streets of Paris, and those of Constantinople. I seem to my self to be buried alive in this close City, where my Chamber-Window affords me no farther Prospect than I can spit; whereas in Constantinople the Gardens are so intermix'd with Houses, that it looks like a City in the midst of a Forest; and by the Advantage of its Situation, is always refreshed with Breezes from the Sea.

Besides the Impurity of these Insidels, who empty all their Filth in the Streets, so that the Dirt of Paris may be smelt some Miles off; the Uncleanness of their Diet, contributes in no small measure to my Distemper; being forced either to feed on Flesh with the Blood in it, or live on Herbs. They laugh at the Niceness of the Musfulmans, who will eat no Meat that was knock'd down or strangled. They seem to be greedy of Blood, saving it in Vessels, and mixing it with Flower of Wheat, make a certain Bread thereof. which they devour without the least Squeamishness. A true Believer would tremble at the Sight of fuch Impiety. I tell thee, it is impossible to live among them and not be polluted: They have no Method of Purification. They wallow, and hug themselves in their Uncleanness: They are worse than the Beasts.

Now the Spring has provided a new Banquet, wherein there is no Impurity, I am refolv'd to live like a Musulman, and conform to the Precepts of our boly Law-giver; who when he beholds my Zeal and Abstinence, will send the Angel of Health from his Paradise, to repair my decay'd Constitution.

The

The French Philosophers are bused in an inquifition after certain kinds of Birds, which from the second Day of this Moon they fay are not to be found in the whole Kingdom, though the Woods and Fields were full of them during the Winter. Some are of Opinion, That they fly to the Moon; afferting, that if their Wings will but carry them beyond the magnetick Force of the Earth, it will be no Pain to glide through the upper airy Region, 'till they arrive within the attractive Energy of that Planet, where they will naturally seek Rest. Others, with more Probability, fay, That these Birds take their Flight to some other Region on Earth, whose Climate is more agreeable to their Natures, at this time of the Year.

I wish I could as easily once a Year take my Flight to Constantinople, where my Heart is Winter and Summer. Adieu, dear Hali, and pity Mabmut, who counts himself unhappy in nothing so much, as in being absent from his Friends.

Paris, 7th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXVIII.

To the Tefterdar, or Lord-Treasurer.

T appears that France has some extraordinary Design by Sea: When and where 'twill be put in Execution, is not yet known; but the vast Preparations that are making seem to threaten some foreign Invasions, rather than a Naval Combat: It looks as if they had an Expedition in Hand greater than that of Kennes; to make a Bridge

Bridge over the Ocean, and join the separated Parts of the World together. New Arsenals are built in several Maritime Towns, and all the Forests are cut down to fill them with Timber for Ships of War: The Mountains are lest naked of Trees, and the stately Woods are transplanted into the Havens. An infinite Number of Men are employ'd in making Cordage, Chains, Bullets, Anchors, Ordnance, and all other Necessaries belonging to a Navy.

This is Cardinal Mazarini's Project, under Pretence of fetting the Poor of the Kingdom at Work, and Disburthening the Commonwealth of Vagabonds and idle Persons. But Mahmut is not placed here, to be amused with State-Umbrages. It is evident, that this Minister designs to render his Master formidable on both Elements. Agents are sent to buy Ships in all Parts; and the very Peasants are forced from the Vineyards and Fields, to man the greatest Fleet that ever this Kingdom fitted out to Sea.

Last Moon the Sieur de Quesne was sent to assist Monsieur Chanut, in purchasing Vessels in Swedeland. It seems there had been some Demurs in his Negociation; to remove which this latter was sent with fresh Instructions. But Monsieur Chanut rejected him; and ten Days ago came an Express from that Minister, desiring, that a more intelligent Colleague might be sent him, in regard he found it difficult to treat successfully with a People too much elated with continual Victories.

Upon this, the Court have sent a Courier to Stockholm with new Orders, whereby he is forbid to make any further Overtures in order to the Continuance of the League between these two Crowns: That France may not always appear in a suppliant Posture, whilst the Swedes seem careles careless to conserve a Friendship which they themselves first coveted.

Digitized by Google

These Misunderstandings may in a short time proceed to a greater Alienation; and in the End, to an open Rupture. Which has the more Probability, in that General Koningsmark lately stopped some French Troops in their March, under Pretence of seeing their Pass-ports; but really, as 'tis thought, to corrupt the Soldiers, and withdraw them from the Fidelity they owe their Sovereign.

This is highly resented here; and they begin to discourse of making Peace with Germany.

What the Issue of these Things will be, is yet in the dark; but God, from whose Throne hangs the Chain of Destiny, which reaches to the Center of the Earth, will, I hope, so dispose of all Human Events, that the Quarrels of the Nazarenes shall minister Occasion to the Osmans to encrease the Territories of our Puissant Emperor.

Paris, 1st of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1645.

LETTER XXIX.

To Nathan Ben Saddi, a Jew at Vienna.

Cannot but highly applaud the Resolution thou hast taken, as thy Letter intimates, to enquire into the Grounds of the Religion thou art of. This shews, that thou settest a Value on thy Reason, and thinkest thy self beyond the Pupillage of a Child; that thou esteemest thy self of Years to make a Choice of thy Religion, and not to take it up on the bare Credit of thy Fore-fathers. 'Tis certain, certain, that Error may be traditional as well as Truth: and the Pagan Idolaters pleaded a greater Antiquity for the Altars of their Gods, than could the Followers of Moses, for the Temple of Jerusalem, the Tabernacle in the Desart, or the Promulgation of the Law it self on Mount Sinai: Since there was scarce a Region on the Continent, which had notestablish'd Rites and Ceremonies of Worship, long before Moses, or even Jacob, the great Father of the Israelites, were born.

Among the rest of the Nations, Arabia, my native Country, was peculiarly blessed with the Footsteps of the illustrious Ibrahim, Grandsather to Israel, from whom the Jews descend. In this happy Country that renown'd Prophet sojourn'd, conversed with Angels: And, with the Majesty which cannot be utter'd. He preached the Unity of the Divine Essence, converted the People from their Idolatry, built an Oratory at Meccha, and was taken up into Paradise.

Ismael his eldeft Son, and Heir of his Father's Spirit, as of his Territories, trod in the Footsteps of the Assumpt of God. He brake down the Idols, afferted one God, the Resurrection, the Day of Judgement, the Joys of Paradise, and the Torments of Hell. His Offspring multiplied, and peopled all the East: The Princes of this boly Line fubdued the Infidel Nations, and rooted themselves in the most fertile Regions of Afia, professing themselves Mussulmans, or true Believers. passed the Light of God from the Face of Ibraham, to his Posterity by successive Generations; 'till at length it rested on the Face of Mahmut, our holy Lawgiver, and was encreased with admirable Splendor, by the frequent Visits of the Angel Gabriel. He took the Root of Evil out of the Prophet's Heart, brought him down the Alcoran from Heaven, and gave him Victory and Honour; call'd call'd him by a new Name, THE SEAL OF THE PROPHETS; carried him to the Throne of God, through Legions of Devils, that waited below the Moon to destroy him. And finally, made his Sepulchre glorious and resorted to, by the Believers of all Nations on the Earth.

I fend thee this Abstract of the Mussulman Hiftory, to the end thou may'st see what Pretensions the Children of Ismael have to the free Law, which you, of the Posterity of Isaac, would monopolize to your selves: As if God had not sent Prophets to all Nations, to lead them into the right Way, and not into the Way of Infidels. Nevertheless, take not these things on my Credit, but examine the Records of thy own Nation, and the Hiftery of past Times. Weigh all things in the Ballance; consult thy Reason, which is an indeficient Light to those who follow it. Your Law was once pure and uncorrupted; but in time the Devil inferted many Errors: He seduced your Fathers; they return'd upon their Steps, and fell back into Idolatry. Then God railed up the Meffias, to reform all Things; but him ye rejected. And when he was taken up into Paradise, ye reported, That be was bang'd on a Tree. In this the Nazareans are your Fools, and fight against themselves; Whilst they affert, as you do, That he who is Immortal and Triumphant, among the hundred and twenty four thousand Prophets, was crucified between two Thieves: Thus bringing a Reproach on the Apostle of God, and on their own Faith, in believing things inconfiftent with the Goodness and Power of the Divine Majesty. Without doubt, Jesus the Son of Mary, is ascended Body and Soul into Paradife; who, whilst he was on Earth, said, Wership One God, your Lord and mine.

Let

Let me not seem importunate, or troublesome, I seek not to circumvent thy Reason, but to direct it. Think seven times before thou change once. I will procure the Books of our Law; peruse them with Judgment, and tell me then, whether thou hast ever seen any Writing comparable to the Alcoran? The Majesty of the Style speaks it above Human Original: It is exempt from Contradictions, from the Beginning to the End: It confirms the Old Testament, which thou believest: It is also over cloathed with Light. Doubtless it is no other than a Transcript of the Book written in Heaven.

If after all thy Search thou shalt determine etherwise, follow thou thy Law, and I will follow mine, We both worship one God, Lord of the Universe.

Paris, 10th of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXX.

To the same.

Nation hinder thee from embracing the Trutb. God shall protect thee from the Malice of Unbelievers. Thy Interest is already great among the Mussumans; our August Emperor will augment both that and thy Honour. Take hold of the strongest Knot, and adhere not to Tagot. The Cleanliness and Delicacy of the Mussumans may invite thee, which far exceeds that of the Jews, and yet is void of Superstition:

which teach us, that so long as the Soul dwells in this Mansion of Flesh, it partakes of bodily Pollutions. 'Tis to avoid these, we abstain from certain Meats and Drinks, which cannot be touch'd without Contamination. To this End, do we observe that superlative Niceness in our Washings and Purisications, which discriminates us from all the World beside. Doubtless, our Law is but the Law of Moses, refined and sublimated from the Dregs of adventitious Error.

Write often to me, and whatever Reasons may prevail on thee not to change thy Religion, let no Arguments tempt thee to swerve from thy Fidelity to the Sovereign of Sovereigns on Earth, the Grand Signior, in whose Veins run the most exalted Blood of Human Race.

Here is a Report in this City, that the Elector Brandenburgh will demand the Queen of Sweden in Marriage, Let me know if it be true, that I may inform the Ministers of the lossy Port, from whom nothing ought to be concealed, that occurses Moment betwixt the two Poles.

Inform me also, what passes remarkable in the Assimbly of the Deputies at Munster, and whether it be true, that the Danube has lately over-slow'd its Banks, and carried away Four hundred Houses in its rapid Course.

Such Stories are told here, by those who know not how to pass away their time, but in hearkening after foreign News, to furnish themselves with Matter to amuse the credulous, and beget Admiration of their Intelligence.

I have fent thee a Watch of my making: If thou acceptest it with good Will, 'tis a sufficient Acknowledgment.

May ·

Vol. IH. a SPY at PARIS.

97.

May God, whose Presence fills the Universe, disclose himself to thee, in the way of Salvation, and continue to breathe good Motions into thy Soul.

Paris, 10th of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXXI.

To the Kaimacham.

A DONAI the Jew has much improved himfelf in his late Progress through Italy. He is grown a perfect Statesman; having found out the way to penetrate into Secrets, and to dispatch Business without any Noise. He may prove very serviceable at Venice, during the present War of Candy. His Acquaintance in that City gives him Access to the Cabals of the Senators, who spare not, over their Wine, to whisper the Counsels of the State, and to descant upon the Measures that are taken to defend the Republick, against the invincible Prowess of the Ottoman Armies.

It is publickly known, that they have sent Embassadors to the Crown of Muscovy, that of Poland, and to the Cossacks, inviting them to enter into a League against the Grand Signior. But sew are acquainted with the private Treaty they are making with the Bassa of Aleppo. We own this Discovery to the Diligence and Wit of this Son of Israel. He has drawn the Secret from the Mouths of several eminent; Connsellors of State; and afforce me. That the Senate have made such Properals fals to the Governor, as cannot fail of inducing him to revolt.

This may prove of ill Consequence, if not timely prevented: The pernicious Example of this Balla may incite others to tread in his Steps. especially his Neighbours of Sidon and Damascus, who have for a long time meditated a Sovereignty, independent of the Throne, which first establish'd them in those Charges. Besides, the fingle Forces of this Baffa will be able to give a powerful Diversion to the Arms of the Empire, already engaged in Candy, Dalmatia, and other Parts, by Sea and Land. He fays, The Venetians speak much in the Praise of this Baffa's Justice, whereof they relate many Examples; among the rest, a certain Cook among the Franks of that City, was accused of dressing and selling. putrify'd Flesh, whereby many that did eat thereof were infected with the Plague. Complaint being made of this to the Baffa, he fends for the Cook. and examines him about it: He reply'd, That he fold none but good and wholesome Meat; for if it happen'd that at any time he was forced to keep any Flesh in his House above three Days. he fo feason'd it with Spices and Herbs, made it very favoury, and without any iH Scent.

The Baffa, not having Patience to hear any more of this fetid Apology, commanded his Arms and Legs to be cut off, and the Veins to be seared up; ordering, That during the short time he had to live, he should have no other Food, but what was made of his own Limbs.

They relate one more Passage, of a Complaint that was made by a Peasant, whose Daughter this Bassas only Son had ravish'd: The Bassa compelled him to marry her, with this Charge, Let me bear no more Complaints of thee, except then are resolved to leave me without a San.

It is reported here, That the King of Perfia has made a Peace with the Great Mogul; and that they will both turn their Forces against our August Emperor.

Here is also a Courier arrived from Marsoilles, who brings News of the Revolt of Cavarra; the Inhabitants of that Place having shaken off the Obedience they owe to the Sultan, and put them: selves under the Protection of the Venetians; and that General Grimani has taken four Ships of Ragusa, laden with Ammunition for our Army. He adds also, That Morisini has thirty small Vessels, befides Gallies, under the very Walls of the I long ago suggested to the Vizir Dardanells. Azim, that the Weakness of those Castles would, one time or other, encourage the Christians to perform some notable Exploit in the Hellesport, But Mabmut's Counsel was not regarded: Now the Event justifies my Advice, the Port will confult the Security of that Avenue. I wish they do not practice the Trojan Wisdom. The Venetians have a powerful Fleet: If they block up the Hellespont, and hinder our Ships from failing into the Archipelago; and the Collacks, in the mean while, cover the Black Sea with their Barks, committing a thousand Piracies and Ravages, what will become of the Imperial City? Whence will they provide Sustenance for so many Millions of People as inhabit that City, and the Parts adjacent.

These Things are worthy of Consideration: And thou, who hast the Care of that capital Sease of the Ottomon Empire, wilt not blame Mabmut, for putting thee in mind of the Danger which threatens even the Seraglio it self at this Juncture. However, I have done my Duty, sage Minister, and refer the rest to thy Wisdom. My Letters are all register'd; and if Assairs should succeed ill, it will be manifested, that Mahmut, who watches Night and Day to serve the great Master of the World, has not been wanting to give timely Notice of what might be advantagious to the Manarchy of the true Faithful.

Digitized by Google

Thou, who are celebrated for thy Justice and Probity, pardon the Liberty which my Zeal for thy Master and mine, renders worthy of Excuse.

Raris, 19th of the 5th Moon, of the Near 1646.

The End of the First Book.

L E T-

LETTERS

A SPY at PARIS.

VOL. III.

BOOK II.

LETTER I.

To the most Magnificent and Illustrious Vizir Azem, at the Port.

SMIN the Dwarf, whom I formerly mention'd, remains still in the Court; and continues his good Offices, in communicating to me such Passages as come to his Knowledge. He has a subtile Wit, and bears no hearty love to the Christians, tho he be one himself in Profession. He frequently visits me, and trusts me with his Secrets. One Day he convinced me by evident Circumstances, that Cardinal Mazarini was projecting to give some secret and sudden Blow to the Ottoman Empire, for which Osmin seems to be concern'd by a natural Inclination; being, as I told thee, born of Mahometan Parents, he was uneasy, 'till he had acquainted acquainted me with his Apprehensions; and I gave him such Instructions, as I thought most proper on this Occasion. I set my Thoughts on the Rack, to prevent so direa Mischief. And having premeditated well on this Affair, I pitch'd on a Course, which would at once clear me from the Cardinal's Suspicion; and by seeming to favour his Designs, would absolutely overthrow them. I went to him boldly one Day, and being admitted to his Closet, I thus address'd that Politician.

HERE are now nine Years elaps'd, great "Minister, fince I first breath'd the Air of " France; during all which Time, I have not on-" ly shared in common with the Natives, the Be-" nefits which have accrued to this noble King-"dom, under the auspicious Ministry of Cardinal " Richlieu, and his no less eminent Successor; but, " have also received many particular Honours " from that illustrious Prince of the Church, to " which your Eminence has been pleased to make " some undeserv'd Additions. Tis to you both " I owe the Character which has introduced me " into the Acquaintance and Favour of the Nobi-46 lity, who on that Score have thought me wor-" thy to instruct their Children in the Greek and " Arabick Tongues; have vouchsafed to admit " me to their Salt, and to encourage me with the " Hopes of finding a comfortable Repose in the " Bosom of the Gallican Church, after a tedious "Peregrination from my own Country.

"When I reflect on all the accumulated Bleffings I enjoy, under the Protection of your Emimence, Blefings equally transcending my Ambition, as they do my Merits; I apply all my Studies, to find out some acceptable way of "Acknow-

Digitized by Google

"Acknowledgment to my gracious Benefactors."
And because nothing can be more welcome to the Guardian of France, than the Means of advancing the publick Good of the Kingdom committed to his Care: I now presume, as a Testimony of my Gratitude, to propose to your Eminence some Speculations, which if put in Execution, will, in my Judgement, not only render France the most formidable and absolute Monarcity on Earth, but also the whole Catholick World in eternal Obligations to her; and give inft Reason to change the Style of his most Christian Majesty, from the eldest Son of the Church; to that of Favinger will not trenden.

"Your Eminence will not wonder at the Zeal of a Stranger, or the Care that Titus of Moldac via takes for France: In being follicitous for this Kingdom, I consult the Welfare of my own Country, and of all the Nations which profess the Faith of Jesus; since it is easy to fee, that in the Fate of France, that of all Europe " is involv'd.

" It is a long time fince the dismember'd Re-" liques of the Roman Empire, bordering on Afia, "found themselves too weak to result the Puis-" fance of the Ottoman Arms. All Greece was "foon over-run by the Warlike Turks. " Sylvania, Walachia, Moldavia, with the greatest " Part of the Upper-Hungary, quickly became Tri-" butaries to the inveterate Enemies of the Chri-" flian Name. And Germany it felf is so enfeebled "by their repeated Incursions, that all the Em-" peror can do, is to make dishonourable and 66 colly Compositions, buying a precarious Peace " with little less Charges than would serve some " more fortunate Prince, to carry on a glorious "and successful War. Neither is the State of Wenice in any better Condition of Defence, the F 4 " Turks

" Turks having pared away whole Provinces, from. " that once flourishing Commonwealth, and by. " their continual Invasions and Hostilities, re-" duced her to a Necessity of merchandizing with " the Ottoman Port for Peace. Which is no " fooner concluded, but on the least Pretence " is broke again, by those who hold themselves not obliged to keep Faith with Christians. Be-" hold, at this Time without Provocation on the " Part of Venite; or a Declaration of War by the " Grand Signior, the late League broken on a fudden, and in a most clandestine Manner. Behold, " Candy environ'd with their Fleet by Sea, and her " fertile Plains cover'd with Armies of Mahometans by Land. Behold her Cities in the Hands of her Enemies, and her Villages laid desolate; " her Nobles put to the Sword, and her Merchants " led into Captivity. In fine, behold that af-" flicted Commonwealth yet struggling with her Fate, and fending her Ambaffadors to all the Princes and States of Christendom, demanding " or rather, in a suppliant Manner, imploring " their Assistance. Yet she finds little or no " Help from any but the Pope, and the Knights " of Malta: And his Holiness has enough to " do to preserve the Patrimony of the Church " from Violence. The State of Genoua is too " intent upon her Traffick, to regard the Cala-" mities of her Neighbours. And all the Princes of Italy have such Diversions at Home as " render their Application to Things Abroad ve-" ry cold and indifferent. In the mean while, " the Turks gain Ground, double their Strength, " and encrease their Victories! O deplorable " State of Christendom! Is there no Redress for " these Miseries? Yes surely, there is! And " fuch a Redress, as only lies in your Power; " great Minister, to apply; which in the Expe"Experiment, I dare assure will prove este-

" I do not pretend to the Visions and Inspira-" tions of Peter the Hermit, who garbled fecular " and divine Offices; and armed himself in Habi-" liment of Steel, went dragooning up and "down Christendom, at the Head of a confused " Rabble, to render himfelf popular, and acquire " the triple Character of Pilgrim, Priest and " Captain. The ill Success of his rath Expedition " shew'd, that he was only stung with a rest-" giour Caprice, and that God approved not his " Folly. I do not go about to propose another "Crusade, or contrive a Way to shed whole "Deluges of humane Blood, with no other Confe-" quence, than to ftein History with the languiste " Memoirs of Christendem's Vanity and Mistortune. "Befides, that would be found impracticable in this Age, which was easy to put in Execu-" tion, Five or Six hundred Years ago: The "World is not so devout now, as it was in those " Days; neither are Men so prompt to run the "Rifque of their Lives on religious Err ands, for " the Honour of being eleem'd Martyrs. Twill " be difficult to find out a new Lift of Godfrey's, " Baldwin's, Guy's, and other Heroes, to lead the " Champions of the Croft through all the Hard-" ships of the Sea and Land, so many hundred Miles, into remote and defelate Regions, to " combate not only with Flesh and Blood, but with Famine, Pestilence, and all the Miseries le of human Life: And, as if this were not " enough, to sheath their Swords elfo in each "others Bowels, for Puntihols, mere Trifles of "imitaken Honour, and ill-timed Emulation": And all this only to purchase the empty ??-" the of King of Jerusalem; or the precurious " Authority of a Gredan Bouperbrit Both Auft " lived F 5

"time, with all Palestine, to the Sarazens; the other depending only on the Pleasure of the Multitude! Such were the glorious Fruits of the Christian Arms in those Days! Such the Triumphs attending our Victories! these the Triumphs attending our Victories! these the Trophies which our Fathers erected to their own Disgrace; when after a War of so many Years they left the Holy Land in a worse Condition than they found it; and of so many Hundred Thousand Men as marched thither, threatning the utter Subversion of the Saracen-Empire, there scarce return'd enough to disperse the News of their own Overthrow.

"Waving therefore these visionary rash Expedi"tions, I now propose to your Eminence an Un"dertaking, which tho' it may make less Noise
"in the World, yet carries more Probability of "Success, and will not only promote the Interest of France, but redound to the Advantage of all · Europe.

"No Man who is acquainted with History, can be ignorant what Claims the Kings of France have made to the Empire of the West, since the Days of Charlemains, the Royal Predecessor of his present Majesty, who was dignisted with the Imperial Title, by the Sovereign Bishop. Neither is it unknown, by what Artifices the House of Austria have procured the Translation of the sarred Austority to their own Family.

"Your Eminate is sensible by what Tyrannous and unjust Methods they have maintain'd themselves in this highest Pitch of Human Glory; and not content with this, how they have aspired after the Monarchy of the tabele World! All the North have groun'd under the Burden of that insupportable Tyrany.
And their Encroachments on the South, have

" render'd that Line little less infamous. " spare neither Civil nor Ecclesiastical Rights, in "the Pursuit of their Ambition, not even the " Patrimony of St. Peter, which has ever been " esteem'd facred and inviolable by Christian Prin-" ces. They have fack'd Rome it felf, and led the " jupreme Paftor of the Church into Captivity. "What should I speak of the Hollanders, Switzers, " Grisons, and other Nations, which, impatient " of the Austrian Yoke, revolted from their cruel " Masters, and have ever fince afferted their Li-" berry by the Force of their Arms? What should " I mention the frequent Troubles in Bobemia, " Transylvania and Hungary, when the Inhabi-" tants of those Countries, grown desperate with " their daily Oppressions, have bravely endea-" your'd to redeem themselves and their Poste, "rity from perpetual Servitude; but for want of " a powerful Protector, have been forced to yield " to their old Mafters! That inceftuous Race are " grown odious to the whole World: Even the " Princes of the Empire are forced to smother " their Resentments, when they elect one to pos-" fels the Imperial Diadem, whom they cannot " but hate! "That therefore which I aim at in this Address " is, To represent to your Eminence, how easy it " will be in this Juncture, for his most Christian " Majefty to recover the Imperial Crown, which " of Right belongs to none but the Successors of "the renown'd Charlemaine; and which even "the greatest part of the Germans themselves. " wish to see placed on the Head of Lewis XIV. " Most of the Electors are already inclining to " the Interests of France: It will not be difficult to " win the rest. The Hungarians, &c. long for " a Deliverer: And the other Provinces beyond " the Danube, will freely open the Gates of * their

" their Cities, to let in bis Armies, whom they " look on as the Hope of all Christendom. The Helvetians, who are Allies of this Crown, will not " fail to perform their Part. The Swedes have al-" ready pluck'd many Feathers from the raveneus And the Forces of this Crown have "blunted her Talens. Another Campaign will " quite deplume her, enervate her last Vigour, " and end the tedious Controversy.

"Let not therefore an untimely Peace with "the Emperor, so much talk'd of, stop the Cur-"rent of the French Triumpha! Let not the " finister Practice of German Pensioners in the 44 Swedish Court, occasion a Rupture between two " the most potent and victorious Crowns in Eu-" rope! Or rather, let no Queen: Christina reap " the fole Glory of fo fortunate and profitable a "War! His Majefy has a formidable Army by " Land; and in a short time, will have an in-"vincible Fleet by Sea. Continual Victories court the Perleverance of the French Valours " whilst the Justice of your Cause invites to the " Battle.

" All Things conspire to put a Period to the " Austrian Grandeur. Only snatch the present "Opportunity, which once loft, may never be " recover'd again. 'Twas only the sudden and " unexpected Fate of Henry IV. this King's "Grandfather, of eternal Memory, that him-* der'd him from putting in Execution the a fame Defign I now propose. And if Lewis *XIII. did not prosecute it, 'twas because he wanted a favourable, Juncture. Now, behold; " it offers it self: It is in your Power, supreme Diretter of the State, under his Mejeffy, to build the Fortune of France fo high, that all the "Nations of Christendom may repose under its * Shadow, Purfue the Sucaela which Houses has " already 0 4

"already granted And when all Europe is thus fettled in a durable Peace, either making how nourable Friendships with, or entirely submitting to the new Gallick Empire; then will be the Time to call the Ottomans to an Account, for the Ravages and Spoils they have committed in Chistian Countries, and to carry our Arms to the Walls of Constantinople; and drive these Barbarians back to their primitive Rocks and Desarts, from whence they have thus long straggled, to ruin the most desirable Provinces of Asse and Europe; nay and of the whole World.

"There is no other way but this, in my Judgment, to Rop the Progress of the Turkish Victor ries. Since it is impossible to make a durable Peace among Christian Princes; but by Con-" quest; I mean such a Peace, as will inspire them " with the Resolution, and put them into a Capa-"city, to unite all their Forces in a War against " the Mabemetans. As for the present Condition of " the Republick, if their Losses were greater than " they are like to be, yet they will be inconfide-" rable, in Comparison to the mighty Gain which " will afterwards accrue, not only to them, but " to all the Christian Nations, by advancing the " French Crown to that height of Grandeur, de-"fign'd for it by Fate. Hitherto the Christian 4 Princes have only endeavour'd to apply a Re-" medy to the Part particularly affected; from "whence if by Fortune they chased the Diftem-" per, it foon brake out in some other Member; " whence it came to pass that we lost Province " after Province, and the Turks are almost cotten " into the Heart of Europe. If therefore we de-" fign to drive them thence, it is necessary to fol-" low this Method, which will be found the only " way to plack this Evil up by the Roots. "Go

"Go on then, most prudent and illustrious "Guardian of the Crown, destin'd to command "the Earth: Go on, and lift up our great "Master to the Wreath with which the Tutelar "Angel of Europe is ready to environ his Sacred "Temples. Let not the German Deputies at Manfer any longer amuse you with seigned Over-tures of Peace. But pursue the propitious Fate "of France, which waits to lead our Armies to "Victories, Triumphs, and Glories, and to e- stablish a new Empire in the World, to which all Nations shall pay Homage, and sy for Protection.

Thou seest, illustrious and serene Vizir, that I have used much Flattery in this Address. It is a necessary Vice in the Court of France, where no Diogenes can have Audience. It cannot be expected that I should discover by the Cardinal's Answer, what his Sentiments were of my Project, He is of a debonair Humour, and would rather seign Virtues to commend in another Man, than put him to the Blush by mentioning his real Vices. This is an Effect of his natural Dispositions, which he is wise enough to improve to the Ends of Policy. There being no subtiler Artissice to gain a popular Esteem, than by the Reputation of a generous Temper.

However, I think I faid Nothing that could juftly offend him, unless he were endued with the incommunicable Gift of discerning Hearts: For otherwise, at the worst, he could but tax me with a Loyal Presumption and Mistake, in proposing Things altogether impracticable.

These were such as thou wilt easily discern when thou considerest, that though they appear fair and easy in the Attempt, as the Circumstances flances of Europe are at present; yet the Revolution of a few Moons may quite change the Face of Affairs; new and unthought-of Difficulties may arise: The Emperor may make a Peace with Swedeland, the Pope might interpose his Media tion and Authority, the Affembly at Munster might have a Conclusion according to their Wishes, the Electoral Princes might be more firmly fastened to the Interest of the Empire. Besides, another Campaigne may prove as fatal to the French, as the former have been prosperous. After all, if they should find Encouragement to begin this Enterprize, and should meet with answerable Success in the Prosecution of it, yet a thousand Occurrences would emerge, to hinder them from enjoying their new-gotten Empire long; or from being able to maintain a War against the Empire, whose Subjects are infinite, and Treasures inexhaustible.

If thou, who art the Light of the Ofman Monarchy, shalt approve of what I have done, my Happiness will be great; nevertheless thy Reproofs will not make me miserable, fince they are Arguments of thy Condescension and Favour.

Paris, 10th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER II.

To Ismael Mouta Faraca, a White Eunuch.

HY Letter is come fafe to my Hands, accompany'd with a munificent Present from Egry Boinou, who thou tellest me is deprived of his Eyes by the Grand Signior's Order. I condole the Calamity of my Friend, yet accuse not the Juflice of him who is Master of us all. We are Musfulmans, and must not dispute the Pleasure of Heaven, or the Commands of our Sovereigns. It is an Argument of their Clemency, when they retrench their Anger, and spare the Lives of their Slaves. The Sultan is merciful in a higher Degree, in not extending his Hands to the Wealth of our Friend; but has left that and his Liberty untouch'd; whereby he is still in a Capacity of enjoying many Pleasures, which are denied to thousands who have their Sight.

I do not write this, as if I were void of Compassion toward my Friend. I owe him still the same Affection, as when he was able to read the Simerity of it in my Face. But I would not have the Loss of his Eyes abate the Sight of his Soul, which is his Reason. Let him remember, that a samous Philosopher has done that voluntarily to himself, for the sake of a less interrupted Contemplation, which is imposed on our Friend as a Punishment. There is no outward Disaster can hurt the Opticks of a Mind guarded with Patience, and shut up within the Circles of its own Light. Such a Soul is impregnable against all the Assaults of Fortune, and Triumphs over Destiny it self.

Befides,

Digitized by Google

Besides, our beloved Eunach can still converse with his Friends, which is a Privilege the Deaf would almost give their Eyes to enjoy. It is hard to determine which of those two Senses would be mis'd with least Regret, especially to a Man, who, by his excellent Voice and Skill in Singing, seems to be the very Soul of Musick.

What is it in all this infinite Variety of visible Objects, that affects the Eye with so refin'd a Pleafure, but the harmonious Disposition and Symmetry of the Parts, which compose the whole Scene of the Universe? And may not that Pleasure be translated to the Ear, when it receives the proportionate Measures, and exquisite Cadences of Sounds? Certainly Musick is no other than Beauty to the Ear, as Beauty is Musick to the Eye.

But our Friend Egry needs not these Encouragements: He understands the Way to make himself happy, and has Wisdom enough to put it in practice.

The Grand Signiar's Fury is pacified. Egry lives. He has Houses and Gardens: Gardens replenish'd with all manner of Fruits and Flowers to gratify his Taste and Smell. He is Master of much Treasure in Silver and Gold, and of many Slaves. If all these cannot contribute to his Felicity, he is Master of bimself, which is essential Happiness.

Thou who succeedest him in that honourable Post, and guardest the Avenue of the majestick Chamber, where the Addresses and Supplications of all the Princes of the Earth are made at the Feet of our august Emperor, watch thy Senses, and obey thy Reason. Remember thy Predecessor's Fate, and forget not Mahmut; but above all things forget not thy selfs. Adieu.

Paris, 20th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LET-

LETTER III. To Dgnet Oglou.

A M extremely surprized, and equally trou-bled at the severe Punishment which Sultan Ibrahim has inflicted on Egry Boinou. His Successor; Ismael Mouta Faraca, sent me the first News of it, but faid nothing of the Eunuch's Neither would I request that Satisfaction of a Man, who derives a new Lustre from the tragical Eclipse of my Friend, lest my Love should have betray'd my Discretion, and tempted me to utter that, which is not proper for a Slave of the Sultan's to express. Our thoughts are our own whilst we keep them chain'd up in our Breasts, but if once we suffer them to take Air in Words, they become another Man's, who may make use of them to our Ruin. I never had Familiarity enough with Ismael, to trust him with Reflections of this Nature. Befides, his own Letter to me discover'd too much Freedom to be void of Design, it being the first that ever pass'd between us; which for that Reason ought to have been dictated in a Style more reserv'd. I set him a Pattern in my Answer, not letting a Word escape my Pen which might speak less Resignation to the Will of our Master, than Tenderness for my Friend's Suffering.

But with thee I dare use greater Freedom: My long Experience of thy Integrity, will justify this Boldnes. Tell me, my Dgnet, was it not the Blindnes of Sultan Ibrahim's Passion, which has robb'd Egry of his Sight? Answer me without Disguise; Was it not some Caprice of Jealousy? Was it not because the Master thought he he saw too much, that the Slave sees not now at all? If that Sense was not judg'd criminal in Egry, why was it in particular punish'd? But 'tis in vain to measure the cruel Frolicks of a Sovereign Monarch by a Rule, who makes his Will a Law.

The Christians say, The Ottoman Princes are Butchers, and the whole Empire a Shambles; where Persons of all Degrees are sacrificed to the Lust or Passion of a Tyrant. I tell thee, though I approve not the licentious Tongues of these Infidels, yet it appears too true, that so uncontroulable a Power as the Eastern Monarchs are invested with, prompts them to commit many Violences, for which Justice can make no Plea. It were to be wish'd, That the Practices of the Sublime Seraglie, did not too often verify it. Suffer me to be exasperated a little for the cruel Sentence executed on my Friend, the most accomplish'd Person within the Walls of that magnificent Palace. Doubtless, he owes the Loss of his Eyes to the Grudge of some envious Minion, who would not brook so dangerous a Rival in the Sultan's Favour. For this unfortunate Eunuch. who charm'd all Hearts, made some Impression also on the cruel Ibrabim's. He often lov'd to hear him fing the lively Dorick Strains, to chase away his Melancholy? For Egry is a second Or. pheus, whose Voice, thou knowest, inspired the Trees and Rocks with Passion. Besides, he has many other Gifts, which render'd his Person and Conversation delectable to all; and taugh. the whole Seraglio, new Lessons of Platonick Love.

When thou hast received this, I defire thee to give him a Visit: Thou knowest his House at Galaga. Embrace him in my Name, and give him a Kiss of faithful Friendship. Forget not also also to return him my Ackowledgments for the Diamonds he sent me. And chear him with this Thought, that one Day his Eyes shall be renew'd in Paradise, far brighter than those glistering Yexuls. Adieu.

Paris, 20th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER IV.

To Dicheu Hussein Bassa.

Housed the Duke of Orleans to begin this Year's Campaign in fo rigorous a Seafon. It was the first Moon, and the Ground was cover'd with deep Snows (an ill-time to march in an Enemies Country.) And when these Snows were disfolv'd, Floods follow'd. It seems as if he were thirsty of Fame, and would acquire the Character of a bardy Warrier; resolving to shun no Fatigue, which might advance the Reputation of his Arms.

The Duke of Enguien, spurr'd on with a glorious Emulation, soon follow'd with another Army, but by a different Road. There are sour Maréfebals of France gone with them. These early Marches make a great Noise. But little of Action could be expected, while the weary Flemming knowing the Passes of the Country, and the Force of the Floods, have kept their Winter Quarters, spending that Time at ease, in preparing all Things necessary for a more seasonable Campaign, which they have now begun.

In this the Spanish Policy deserves Commendation; who would not expose the Health and Lives of their Soldiers to annecessary Rigours, but waited 'till the Sun had well dry'd up the unwholsome Damps of the Earth, and shedding his benigner Influence through the Air, invited them forth into the Field. But when I thus approve the Wisdom of the Spaniard, think not that I condemn the sprightly Genius of the French, who seem to approach nearest the Bravery of the Mussulman Armies. The Action of a French Officer was worthy of Remark, who being fent from the Camp with Letters to the King and Queen, arrived at the Court the 24th Day of the Second Moon, whilft the Ground was yet frozen hard. After he had deliver'd his Message, the Chamberlain of the Royal Housbold appointed him a Lodging for that Night in the King's Palace, he being to return to Flanders the next Day. But he generously refused it, faying, It became not bim to lie in a Bed of Down, when his General, with the whole Army, were forced to fleep on the frozen Earth. Therefore, causing some Straw to be brought out of the Stables, he took his Repose thereon in the open Air. The young King, extremely pleased with his Gallantry, order'd him a hundred Pieces of Gold, and recommended him to the Duke of Orleans, as one of the bravest Men in his Army.

I swear by the whitling of the Winds, and the ruffling of the Leaves, that I honour such Virme, even in an Infidel.

Paris, 20th of the 6th Meon, of the Year 1646.

LET

Digitized by Google

LETTER V. 70 Kerker Hassan, Bassa.

HY Letter is come to my Hands, with the Present of Kopba, which is so much the more acceptable, because thou broughtest it thy felf from the Valley of Amoim, the Place of my Nativity. It is an evident Sign that thou hast not forgot thy Countryman, in that thou condescendest to oblige him in so peculiar a Manner. The Place where we drew our first Breath, is always dear to Mortals; and the Remembrance of that delicious Vale, affects Mabmut with fingular Delight." Tis true indeed, I was brought from thence before I could diffinguish one Place from another; but I have visited that Region since, and have Reason to pronounce it the most delectable Part of Arabia. Had the Grecian Poets feen that Paradife, they would not have so extoll'd the celebrated Fields of Tempe in Thessaly. This happy Vale is the Elyfium of the World, bles'd with an eternal Spring.

Thou art highly oblig'd to the Sultan for the Liberty he has given thee to visit the Place of thy Cradle, and to sojourn so long among thy Kindred. Thy Father was famous in that Country for hunting of Lions, and other Beasts of Prey. I have heard some of our Tribe praise his Valour and Dexterity, in the chase of those sierce Animals. They told me, That in the Space of two Years, he had presented the Beglerbeg with twenty Lions Heads, kill'd by his own Hand: That he had three tame ones in his House, which he had taken when Whelps, from a Lioness of prodigious Bulk. That the Walls of his House were hung hung with the Skins of Tigers, Panthers and Lions, the Trophies of his indefatigable Diligence, Skill and Courage, in Pursuit of wild Beasts. In a word, they faid, He was the most successful Hunter in all Arabia. If thou inheritest his Inclinations as well as his Blood, (for they commonly go together) thou hast had a fair Time to range the Forests, and purge the Defart of those ravenous Creatures. Were it not for the Enmity of the Gnats, the East would be over-run with these Savages. They fay, This little despicable Insett destrovs more Lious than all the Huntsmen in Asia. For swarming about them in the Heat of Summer. they chiefly fasten on their Eye-lids, which they fling so vehemently, that the Lions thinking to ease themselves by scratching, often tear their own Eyes out, and so are famish'd.

To understand well the different Natures of Beasts, is a Study sit for Kings. 'Twas the Glory of Solomon, to be accurate in this Knowledge: And Alexander the Great had such an Esteem for it, that he bestow'd on Aristotle the Philospher Eight hundred Talents, only for writing a Treatise of Animals. Our holy Prophet was eminent above all other Mortals, for his Familiarity with the Brutal Generation, understanding their Qualities and Language, and often discoursing with them. When he lived in the Desart, a Libard continually waited at the Door of his Cave, and did all the Offices of a kind and faithful Servant. Such Grace is given but to few.

But I forget my own Opportunity of venting my Affections to my Country and my Friends. I forget that I am writing to one who is newly come from Arabia. Would to God I could fee thee, were it but for an Hour. I have a thou-fand Questions to ask about my Relations, and what changes have happen'd since I was there.

But

But I must factifice these natural Fondnesses to the Will of Destiny. I am a double Exile: And since it is for the Service of the Grand Signier. I am resigned.

Adieu, happy Minister; and if Mahmut may be admitted sometimes to mingle with the Train of thy better Thoughts, he shall count himself happy wherever he is.

Paris, 2d of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER VI.

- To Huffein Bassa.

THE taking of Retino in Candy, had fill'd the Nazarenes with Apprehensions of greater Calamities.

The first fortunate Strokes in a War, make deep Impressions on the Enemy; the Vulgar leoking on them as the index of their fature Destiny. But repeated Successes chill their Vitals, bereave them of Courage and Hope, leaving them nothing but ominous Portents, and superstitious Presages of their approaching Ruin. So hard a thing it is to judge of Humane Events, without being carried into Extremes. They already give over the whole Island for lost. I wish and believe it may prove true. Yet at the same time I know the Fortune of War is uncertain, and another Campaign may repair or revenge the Damage they have suffained in this and the former.

The Venetians lost Five thousand Men before the Walls of that Town, among whom was General General Cornaro, the Viceroy of the Island, flain in the first Onset, besides what were kill'd by our Soldiers when they enter'd with the retreating Candiots, and sacrificed all to the Heat of Martial Passion.

But that which appear'd most ominous to their Cause, tho' the present Damage were less, was the falling out of the Supravettior, and the Proveditor of the Isle: Who not agreeing about the Extent of their different Commissions, form'd two Parties: between whom there happen'd a surious Encounter, in which Four hundred were slain on both Sides.

These sinister Events occasion'd the Republick to make fresh Applications to the Court of France; and an Ambassador is sent from this Crown to Confantinople, in order to mediate a Peace. They call him Monsieur de Varannes, a Man of a presumptuous Disposition, and who delights to attempt difficult Things. When there could not be found a Person, willing to undertake a Negociation, which carries so little Probability of succeeding, this Gentleman, in a Bravado offer'd himself; telling the Queen, that he made no doubt of so representing Matters to the Grand Signior, as would infallibly produce a Peace.

It had been easy for Cardinal Mazarini (whose Counsel the Queen follows in all Things) to have hinder'd this Man's Voyage. But those who are acquainted with the Pique that is between them, conclude, That the Cardinal confented to his Commission, on purpose to lay a Train for his sturre Disgrace; as knowing the Boldness of his Temper was far from being seconded with equal Wisdom and Conduct; and that though he was prone to undertake great and hazardous Actions, yet he never had the good Fortune to accomplish any thing of Moment.

They

They that know this Gentleman's Character, fay, That any Example will encourage him to ruth into Labyrinths and Perils. And where Examples are wanting, he is ambitious to be made one himself. He fears not to tread in the Footsteps of such as have miscarried in the most desperate Enterprizes; but promises himself Success, where a Thousand have fail'd. In fine, he is esteem'd the rashest Man living.

I send thee this Description of the French Ambassador, that thou may'st communicate it to the Sovereign Divan. It will be no small Advantage to know the Temper and Qualifications of foreign Ministers residing at the august Port: Especially at this Juncture, whereon the Fate of Christendom depends. Besides there cannot be too great Caution us'd, to obviate the subtile Trains of Cardinal Maxarini, who, I sear, is contriving no kind Offices to the Ottoman Empire.

I kis the Hem of thy Vest, illustrious Baffa,

and bid thee adien.

Paris, 2d of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER VII.

To the same.

HE Captain Bass a the Reputation of a good Seaman among the French. They highly applaud his expeditious Relief of Canea, and no less commend the Secrecy with which he landed his Army, and took the Town of Retime. The French are generally great Criticks in Military Affairs, and are not so partial to the Honour of the Christians, as to deny the Brailes that are due to an expert Leader among the Muffulmans. Yet they are inconstant, and seldom retain the same Sentiments long. Every Circulation of their Blood, begets new Friendships, new Opinions, new Censures. In this they seem to inherit the Vices of the antient Gauls, as well as their Country.

A Roman Emperor, who made War in this Nation, hath left excellent Memoirs behind him: wherein among other things, he describes the Nuture of the Gauls, their Dispositions and genial Inclinations. He that shall read his Writings which were penn'd above Sixteen hundred Years ago, and shall converse with the present French, will eafily conclude; That the latter are a living Transcript of the former; and that their Humours and Actions are exactly copied from his Words. Yet in nothing does the Character of the primitive Gauls suit more truly to the present Inhabitants, than in their furious Onfets in a Battel, and their equal Readiness to Flight. Their first Assault seems to speak 'em more than Men. their second, less than Women; and they seldom venture on a third.

Wilt thou know then, how they obtain so many fignal Victories? It is by Stratagems and Money. Where they cannot circumvent their Enemies, they corrupt a Party of 'em with Bribes and Penfions. Thus they purchase their Conquelts with a more powerful Metal than Steel. The Force of Gold, to which all things yield, lays Cities and Provinces at the Feet of this invincible Monarch.

But, I pray Heaven, so to prosper the Armies of the Empire founded on Vertue, that this Infidel Prince, and all the Nazarenes, may experience their Gold to be as ineffectual as their Swords, 2-G 2 gainst against the Valour and just Revenge of the true Believers.

Paris, 2d of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER VIII.

To the Venerable Musti; Sovereign Guide of the True Believers.

HOU, who art all Goodness, the Arch-Type of Clemency and Virtue, wilt not number me among the importunate, for so often troubling thee with Disputes of our hely Law. I ask thee no common Questions, neither am I captious, feeking Occasions to darken what is apparent, or invalidate the Testimony of bim who touch'd the Hand of God. I revere the baly Oracles, and the Beek not dictated on Earth. Every Chapter I read in the Alcoran, makes me bless the Angel who took so many Flights, to bring down the saared Pages from Heaven. And my Reverence is encreas'd towards that Folume of Glery, when I consider it was not hastily compos'd; every Versisle being the Product of Divine Premeditation. Doubtless it excels all the Writings in the World. No Scripture before or fince, has approach'd to the mysterious Elegance of those Celestial Lines. Yet methinks I find a great Profundity of Wifdom in the Treatifes of the Ancients.

Thou wilt say, my Station requires me to read Men more than Books, being not sent hither to contemplate, but to act for the Interest of my Master, and the Ottoman Empire. Tis true, true, my Bufiness now is to unravel the Defigns of the Infidels; but bear with me, if I tell thee. that in order to this I took no wrong Courfe, when in my younger Years I apply'd my felf to Books, which are but Men turn'd infide out, or metamorphosed into Letters; against whom thus furviving themselves the Stroke of Death cannot prevail.

Those who have erected Statues of Gold, Silver, Brass, or Marble, to the Memory of departed Heroes, can but transmit the Effigies of their Bodies to Posterity; which, thou knowest, is the ignobler Part of Man. And herein they come fhort of the Ægyptians, who have the Art of preferving the Bodies themselves incorruptible for a thousand Generations. But they who left their Writings to Posterity, have obliged the World with an immortal and lively Image of their Mind: This is properly the Man, and lives for ever; when the Body is confirmed in the Grave, and the Statue perhaps is eat up by Time, or demolish'd by Envy.

Pardon this Digression, oraculous and unerring Mouth of God. I have a great deal to fay, and cannot comprehend it in a few Words. It has been enjoin'd by our boly Doctors, That a Muffulman should not read the Books of prosbane Infidels. But: tellime, thou who art the Refeleen of Doubts, whether this Precept is extended to all, without Exception; or, whether a Difpenfation may not be allow'd to fuch as read those Books with one Eye, whilst the other is fix'd on the Law, which balances the Mind with Truth? the Altoran tells us, that the Devil has inserted some Falfities in the best Writings: But, is it not possible for a Man to separate the good from the bad? I read. in the Book of Glory, many remarkable Things. concerning Alexander the Great: But is it unlawful ful also to peruse what has been writ by others, of the Life of that famous Warrior, and boly Prophet? Both Grecian and Roman Historians have related his Adventures in Afia, his Battels with Darius the Perfian Monarch, and Porus the Indian. They praise his Continence and modest Regard to Syfigambis and her Daughters, when they were his Captives; his inviolable Friendship to Ephiftion, whilst living, and the affectionate Tears he shed for him after his Death. Yet they condemn him of cruel Ingratitude, for facrificing Clitas to his Choler, and the Fumes of Wine, who was a faithful Friend, a valiant Soldier, and once had . faved his Life in a Battel. They cannot pass over the Burning of Perfepelis, without some Reflections on the unmanly foftness of this Warrior; who, to please his Concubine, gave Orders, that the fairest and most magnificent City in Asia should be let on fire. The Perfiant boalt, that that City was built all of Ceder; that Cyrus had wholly difplanted, not only Mount Libarus, but the choicest Nurseries of that fragrant Wood, through all Afia, to build this glorious City, in Emulation of Solomon King of the Jews, who was by other Princes thought to value himself too high, for building the Temple of Jerusalem of the same Materials. They add, That Alexander found in this City ninety Millions of Caracks in Gold; that after the Debauch was over, and the Flames had confam'd to Ashes this Pharnix of Asia, the Conquerer wept, and commanded the Money he had found there should be expended in raising another in its room, more glorious than the former: But that Thais, who had persuaded him to ruin it, was the only Obstacle to its Re-edification. For such was her Empire over this Monarch, that he could deny her nothing. $ 1.

What

What I have said of Persepolis, is recorded by Persian Historians; other Writers make some Mention of it, but not so particularly. There are some also who mention his demolishing of Tyrus, a City so ancient, That 'tis said to be first built by one of the Grand Children to Noah, of whom, thou knowest, the Alcoran speaks often. They tax him also with Cruelty, in causing Two thousand of the chief Tyrians to be crucified, as a Sacrifice to Hercules. Thou art best able to judge, whether this be agreeable to Truth; for what Mussuman will believe, that the victorious Prophet was guilty of so barbarous an Idolatry?

The Method he took to subdue this impregnable City, is an Argument of his invincible Courage; and that there is nothing impracticable, to a Mind arm'd with Resolution and Perseverance.

Tyrus was fituated above half a Mile in the Sea, when the Macedonian demanded a Surrender. The Citizens trusting to the Strength and Height of the Rock whereon they liv'd, (for 'twas a perfect Island) and to their Distance from the Shore of the Continent, bld Defiance to him, whom God had ordain'd to subdue all Nations, between the Extremities of India, and the Pillars of Hercules. The Conqueror, enflam'd at their Refusal of offer'd Peace, prepares for an Assault. He attempted, without the Miracle of Moses, to make a Path for his Army through the Sea. He follow'd the Steps of the Babylonian Monarch, who not three Ages before, had join'd this proud Neit of Merchants to the firm Land. 'Twice his industrious Soldiers raised a Causey above the Waves to the very Walls of Tyrus; and as often: was their Labour defeated by the watchful Tyriens. When the third time he proved success-, G 4 ful :

ful; and in spight of all their Resistance by Fire and Sword, after a Siege of Six Moons, he scal'd the Walls of that Queen of Maritime Cities; and convinc'd the World, that no Human Force could put a Stop to his Conquests, whom Desting had appointed to chassise the Nations of the Earth.

That Chapter in the Alcoran, which speaks of this renowned Worthy, tells us, That be marched fo far Eastware, 'till be came to a Country where the Sun rifes. This Paffage the Christians ridicule, faying, that the Sun rifes and fets in all Countries $ and that there is no stated Point of East and West, in the Fibrick of the World; fince the same Place which is East of one Country, is West of another. Thus the Despifers of our boly Law cavil at the Alcoran, and fay, 'tis composed of old Wives Tales; a rude indigested Collection of Eastern Romances, and superstitious Fables, calculated for the Meridian of Ignorance, first promulged in the favage and unpolish'd Defarts of Arabia, and afterwards propagated by the Sword shrough those Countries, whose Vices had banish'd their Learning, and gender'd them flexible to a Religion, whose highest Pretensions consisted in gratifying the Senfes.

These Criticks consider not at the same time, that they argue against the Old and New Tessament, (which is esteem'd the Alcoran of the Christians) wherein there is often Mention made, of the rising and going down of the Sun; of East and West, as proper Points or Marks, from which to take the Situation of Countries. Assuredly in this they are captious: For tho' there be no stated Point of East or West in the Globe, yet India being the nearest Region of this Continent to that Part of the Horizon where the Sun daily sirst appears, it has, not without without Reason, gain'd the additional Epithet of East. And 'twas here the Macedonian Heroe Iweat, because he could conquer no farther, unless he would have begun a War with the Fish of the Sea.

There are many other Passages related of Alexander's Temperance, Moderation, Justice, Fortitude, and such like Virtues, and something of his Vices. But I will not tire thee with all that is said of this invincible Monarch; nor trace him in all his Marches through Asia. I will not trouble thee with what they say of his Journey into Egypt, and aspiring to be call'd the Son of Jupiter Ammon; his being posson'd at Babylon, in the height of all his Triumphs; and the cantonizing his Empire among his chief Captains. Whatsoever in these Histories is agreeable to the boly Alcoran, I acquiesce to; what is repugnant to that Summary of Truth, I reject as Fable.

Tell me, thou fovereign Resolver of Doubts, whether on these Terms I may not read the Writings of Infidels? Books are a Relief to the Mind oppressed with melancholly, and especially Histories, which also bring Profit, by rightly informing us of the Transactions of past Ages: So that Things, which were done thoulands of Years ago, are made present to us. Where then is the Crime in reading these Memoirs of the Ancients? Is it not confishent with the Faith of a Muffulman, to read these Histories, because they were penn'd. by Heathens? Must we reject all that the Pagans did or faid? Why then are the Works of Plutarch had in fuch Veneration by the Princes of our Law? I tell thee, I not only read Plutarib, Livy, Tacitus, Xenophon, Polybius, with many other Hiftorians that were Pagans, but I improve by their Writings. Such rare Examples of Virtue, such G 5 illufillustrious Patterns of Justice. Such folid Precepts of Morality as these Authors abound with, cannot in my Opinion, hurt any Man, who defires to square his Life by the best Rules.

I read also the Poets, whose Fables and Parables seem to me but to veil many excellent and profitable Maxims of Human Ease.

The Story of the Birth of Typhon, his warring with Jupiter, and his final Overthrow, denotes the monstrous Rife of Factions in a State, and their Ruin.

The Cyclops being employ'd by Jupiter in making Thunderbolts, and killing Esculapius, for which they themselves were afterwards slain by Apollo, intimates the Use which Sovereign Princes make of cruel, covetous and unjust Officers; who when they have fulfill'd the Pleasure of their Masters, are abandon'd by them to the Revenge of the oppress'd Subjects. This is commonly experienc'd in all Monarchies, and especially in the mighty Empire of the Ofmans; where the Baffa's, though the Grand Signier, for the Ends of State, connives a while at their unjust Oppression of the Masselmans under their Government, yet in due thee, to shew his Abhorrence of their Villanies, configns 'em over to the Exe-cutioner. Thou knowest to whom the Bow-string was fent laft; I wish his Successor may not equally merit it.

Action's being devour'd by his Dogs, only for seeing Diana in a Bath, might have serv'd as a Warning to Useph the Black Eunuch, who could not restrain his Tongue from babling out the private Amours of Sultan Ibrahim. It was Danger enough to know the Secret; but to divulge it, was a sure way to incur the Revenge of the Prince.

Not much unlike was his Error, who the' he did not report it to others, yet had the Prefumption to check his Sovereign to his Face, and reproach him with Luxury. Had he been acquainted with the Fable of Endymion and the Moon, it would perhaps have taught him, that it is not the part of a Favourite to take notice of his Master's stolen Pleasures, but rather to invite him sometimes from the Toils of State, and unbend his Mind with Recreations.

These are many other profitable Remarks hidden under the Fictions of the Poets; which, tho' they may feem sufferious at first View, yet being examin'd with a little Attention, proves as easy to be understood, as the Hieroglypbicks were of old to the Egyptians, who knew no other Letters.

God the first Intellets, who imprinted his Mind on Tablets of Marble, in Letters of Arabick, and writ the Decalogue with a Beam of his Glary; having also inspired all Nations with the knowledge of Letters, grant, That whilst I read the Records of the Gentiles, I may not forget the Precepts of the Aleeran.

Paris, 23d of the 7th Moan of the Year 1646.

LETTER IX.

To Muret Baffa.

Courier came to this City last Night, bringing Newsof the taking of Courters by the Franch Army. This is a considerable Town in Flanders, and commands a great part of the Country, The Duke of Orleans invested it on the night ninth of the last Moon, and on the eighteenth lay down before it with the whole Army. The Spanifb General hasten'd to its Relief, and brought Thirty thousand Men of Six Nations, to combat with the French. But they quarrel'd about Precedency of Post. High Words pass'd between the Duke of Lorrain and General Lamboy. Thus, while they spent their Time in needless Contests. the French took the Town: And having left a ftrong Garrison there, part of the Army commanded by the Mareschal de Grammont, is marched to join the Hellanders, with Defign to attack Antwery; and the rest follow the Duke of Orleans, who, they fay, intends to befiege Mardyke. This is a Sea Town that has nothing in it confiderable enough to tempt a Conqueror, fave the Haven, which is of great importance in those Seas.

We have had no Rains here these three Moons, which makes the People fear a Famine. Provisions of all forts are very dear; and those who have great Quantities of Corn will not bring it to the Markets. The Fruits are all blafted, and a Distemper rages in the City, which fills all Places with Death and Courning. The Cattel drop down dead in fields, and the Rivers are almost dried up. Men languish and wither, as if parch'd up by some inward Fire. Fearful Apparitions are feen in the Air; each Night brings forth new Prodigies. The Peole lament the prefent, and presage greater Calamities to come. While Mahmut perleveres unmov'd, and neither molests himself nor others, about the inevitable Decrees and Destiny. I keep in the Path of my Duty, without turning to the Right Hand or to the Left. I serve the Grand Signier faithfully: I pray for his Health, and for the Welfare of the Empire. I neither give Alms to the Infidels, nor do them any Injuries. In fine, if I cannot reap any Profit from other Mens Virtues, I take care their Vices shall do me no harm.

'Tis said there will be a Procession here shortly, whereat the King, the Queen Regent, and the whole Court will assist bare-soot, for an Example of others. The Body of a certain Female Saint, whom they esteem the Patroness of this City, will be taken out of the Church, where it lies, and will be carried with other Reliques of Saints thro' the Streets of Paris, to attone the Wrath of Heaven, which seems to be kindled against them.

In the mean time I pray Heaven to fend down its Bleffings on the Ottoman Empire, and preferve the true Faithful from the three Scourges of God.

Paris, 23d of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER X.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

Perceive thou hast follow'd the Advice I formerly gave thee, to read Histories, wherein thy Letter speaks thee, very conversant. Thou wilt have no Reason to repent of a Labour that assords so agreeable a Diversion, especially to a Soldier and a Statesman. They open the Graves, and call forth the Dead, without disturbing their Repose; and present to us those Heroes living, talking and assign great Things, whose Bodies have lain buried in Silence and Obscurity many Ages. They introduce us into the Closets of Princes, Princes, revealing their most secret Counsels. They make us familiar with the Intrigues of Paliticians, and the Stratagems of Warriors. In sine, there is nothing publick or private, in the Courts or Camps of the greatest Monarchs, to which an Historian is a Stranger.

I applaud the Choice thou hast made of Grecian Histories, and others of the East; yet I counsel thee, not to neglect those of the West. The ancient Roman Writers are full of rare Examples; and modern France, which emulates all great and glorious Undertakings, takes equal Care to commit to Posterity, the Lives of illustri-I say not this, in Contempt of ous Persons. other Countries in Europe. The Christians of these Parts in general are accurate Historians. They are univerfally Learned, in regard there is no Kingdom in Europe, where they have not Schools and Academies, where all Languages and Sciences are taught. The Plough-men in the Field speak Latin and Greek, which thou knowest are now grown obsolete, and no where to be learn'd but in Books. The Merbanicks are Philosophers; and every Man sets up for an Historian, or an Antiquary. It was not so in former Times, when the Ecclesiasticks had engross'd all Manner of Learning to themselves, except some few of the Nobility and Gentry, who had the Advantage of Patrimonial Libraries, and Leifure to apply themselves to Study. For then it was difficult to purchase Books, there being but few; and for those, they were obliged to the Labour of the Scribe. Hence it came to pass, that only such as had Plenty of Money, and a strong Inclination to Knowledge, monopoliz'd the chiefest Masuferipes into their Hands, and bequeath'd them as a Legacy to their Off-spring. But, fince the Invention of Printing, Books are infinitely multiplied, ed, grown chesp and common: And those Histories and Sciences, which before were shut up in the Latin, Greek, or some of the Oriental Languages, are now translated into the vulgar Speech of every Nation; whereby the lowest fort of People who can but read have the Privilege to become as knowing as their Superiors, and the Slave may vie for Learning with his Sovereign. This makes the Nazarenes upbraid the true Faithful with Ignorance and Barbarism, because Printing is not suffer'd throughout the Mussulman Empire. They consider not the bad Consequences of this Art, as well as the good: And, that the Liberty of the Press has fill'd the World with Errors and Lies: Befides, they are Strangers to the Education of the Mussilmans, who are generally taught the Arabick and Persian Tongues from their Childhood: In which Two Languages, how many famous Histories have been writ? There is no point of useful Wisdom, which is not comprized in the Writings of the Eastern Sages. And as for unprofitable Treatifes and Pamphlets with which the Europeans abound, they are superfluous and burdensome, bringing a double Loss, both to Writer and Reader; while they rob them of their Time and Money, and commit a Rape on their Understandings: Add to this, the fatal Effects which this depraved Indulgence of Printing has produced in Christendom. What Sacrileges, Masfacres, Rebellions and Impieties, have overflow'd most Parts of the West in this licentious Age? What Hatred among Christians, what Seditions among Subjects, Diversities in Religion, Contempts of all Law, both Divine, Natural, and those of Nations? The Vices, at which former Times would have blush'd; nay, at the very naming of which our Fathers would have started, as at a Prodigy, are in these Days committed openly, openly, without Shame, without Contradiction; whilst there are Authors who dare publickly affert the Cause of Impiety, and patronize all manner of Prophanations.

But thou, who hast the Honour to guard the incorruptible Seat of Justice and Virtue, the bright Throne of the Osman Emperors, who are the Shadows of God on Earth, hast made such a Choice of Books, as commends thy Wildom, and the Sincerity of thy Morals. Thou wilt not fuffer thy Imagination to be tainted with those enchanting Ideas of Evil, which are drawn by the Pens of some elegant Writers. All that thou seekest in Books, is to inform thy Understanding, rectify thy Judgment, and enfiame thy Affections with the Love of Virtue. To this end serve the divine Precepts of our boly Doctors, and other learned Sages; the Writings of Philosophers, and the Examples of renown'd Herees. From these thou gatherest Strength, to practife the four material Virtues. and all the good Qualities that spring from thole Roots.

Go on, and increase in the Graces and Accomplishments, which shall render thee worthy to be made the Subject of a particular History; while the old shall recommend, and the young shall covet, nothing more passionately, than to read the Life of Caffim Hali, Janizar Aga.

Mahmut salutes thee with a Kiss of Affections Reverence thy felf, and all Men will honour thee!

So taught Pythagoras.

Paris, 17th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XI.

To the same.

Had forgot to perform in my other Letter, what thou commandedit me. Yet knowing the Eiteem thou hast for Women of Virtue and rare Endowments, and with what Pleasure thou readest their Stories, I should never send any Dispatch to thee, wherein there is not a Relation of some Heroine. I will be more diligent hereaster, to observe the Disposition of my Superiors, and will endeavour to procure a Collection of the Lives and Charasters of all the famous Women, that have been recorded in History. In the mean while, hear what the French say of Christina Queen of Swedeland, of whom thou requirest a Description.

She is the only Daughter of Gustavus Adolphus, the most victorious Prince that ever govern'd that Nation, and one of the most successful Warriors in the World. As his whole Life was led in the Field, so there he received an honourable Death, being slain in the Battle of Lutzen: Some say, by the Treachery of Duke Albert, who had in Appearance deserted the Emperor, and offer'd himself a Voluntier to Gustavus Adolphus. I formerly mention'd this Duke, and that he was kill'd by a Swedish Lady. If the Suspicion of the Swedes be well grounded, and that Duke Albert was really guilty of the Murder of Gustavus, it may be this was the Motive which brought those Amazons into the Field, to revenge the Death of their Prince. But it is impossible to be assured.

When

When the French speak of Gustavus Adolphus. they cannot restrain their Words on this side a Panegyrick. They say he was a Prince above all Praise. 'Tis certain, his very Enemies admired his inimitable Courage, and matchless Fortune. I have fent thee the true Effigies of his Face, where thou wilt see a most agreeable Mixture of Majesty and Benignity, creating Respect and Love at the same time in the Beholders. He was so familiar with every one, as if he had forgot himself, as well as he was a Stranger to Pride. He was a great Student in his Youth, and made himself Master of Latin, French, and Italian; being also perfectly skill'd in Ancient and Modern Histories. He had a wonderful Faculty in discovering Impostors; a dexterous Wit in Time of Danger and Difficulty, being ready at Counsel, and swift in Execution; and as cunning at a Stratagem, as he was bold at an Onfet. He was liberal to his Officers, and to all Men of Merit; but a severe Punisher of Disorders in his Army. And that which crown'd all the rest of his Virtuce, his Piety to God was fingular and worthy of Remark. The French relate a memorable Saying of this King, when he was once in his Camp before Werben. He had been solitary in the Cabinet of his Pavilion some Hours together, and none of his Attendants durft interrupt him; till at length a Favourite of his, having some important Matter to tell him, came foftly to the Door, and looking in, beheld the King very devoutly on his Knees at Prayers. Fearing to molest him in that facred Exercise, he was about to withdraw his Head, when the King spied him, and bid him come in; saying unto him, Thou wonderest te see me in this Posture, since I have so many thoufands of Subjects to pray for me. But I tell thee, that no Man bas more need to pray for himself, than be.

be, who being to render an Account of his Attions to none but GOD, is for that Reason more closely afsaulted by the Devil, than all other Men beside.

Gustavus was born in the Year 1594, at which time, they say, a Comet was seen in the Form of a Sword, with its Point directed toward Germany; which the Astrologers of those Times interpreted as a Presage of that King's Warlike Genius, and of his suture Conquests in the Empire. He came to the Government before he had seen full seventeen Winters, and was cut off in the eight and thirtieth Year of his Age.

It is said, That a few Days before his Death, when his Soldiers received him with infinite Acclamations and all the Marks of an unusual and intemperate Joy, he seem'd to be troubled at it, saying, That be took that excessive Demonstration of his Soldiers Love, for an Omen of some approaching Disafter: And that he was affered GOD would, by taking him away, teach them, that there is no Considence to be reposed in any Mortal.

After the Death of Gustavus, the States of the Kingdom assembling, proclaim'd Christina Queen; and during her Minority, committed her to the Intelage of Five principal Officers of the Kingdom, who also took on them the whole Care of the Communicality.

She is persect in Seven Languages; well vers'd in Ancient and Modern Philosophy, and a complete Historian. In fine, she has acquir'd the Title of the mast learned Princess of ber Time.

She is of a graceful and majestick Aspect; has a piercing Eye; wears part of her Hair loose about her Temples, and showing down in Curls to her Shoulders; the rest braided up behind, in Form of a Wreath. Thus is she represented by her Pisture, which I have seen in a Gallery of Cardinal Mazarini's Palace, who professes fesses a great Veneration for this Queen. Could I have purchased this Portraidure, as I did her Father's, I would have sent it thee: But all the Pencils in Paris are hardly sufficient to supply the Closets and Galleries of the Nobles with this admired Figure. She is become the Idol of the French.

Many great Matches have been offer'd her, but she resules all, either for Reasons of State, or Dislike of the Persons, or an Aversion she has for a married Life; or through Opposition of her Nobles, who seem to covet to be govern'd by a Maiden Queen. Soon after her Father's Death, the King of Denmark attempted to make her his Wife; but his Address was abruptly rejected.

No better Encouragement did the King of Poland lately meet with, who twice follicited the same thing for himself, and was as often repulsed. But this, 'tis thought, proceeded from some politick Reasons, he being descended of Sigismund, a former abdicated King of Sweden; all whose Posherity are for ever excluded from enjoying the Swedif Crown, by a Law.

The English also gloried in a Virgin Queen the last Age: Her Name was Elizabeth, whom thou canst not but have heard of. She was the Daughter of Henry VIII. King of that Nation. She was a Princess of an extraordinary Genius, remarkable for her Wit and Learning. 'Twas one of her Subjects, who the first of all Mortals, sail'd round the Globe: And, by his fortunate Service, she vanquish'd the reputed invincible Armada of Spain. She govern'd her Kingdom with such exquisite Conduct, as made the greatest Potentates revere her Wisdom. 'Tis to her Bounty the United Provinces owe the Rise of their present Grandeur and Riches; when they address'd this potent potent Queen in a Form of humble Suppliants, entitling themselves, The Poor Distressed States. But now they're High and Mighty, pushing for an Equality with Sovereign Princes.

I cannot comprize in a Letter all that may be faid of this great Queen. Besides, Historians vary in her Character: Those that speak most impartially, say, That she had extraordinary Virtues, yet was not free from great Vices. We must not expect in any Mortal, a Temper exempt from the common Malediction; much less in that Sex, whose natural Weakness claims our Indulgence and Excuse. It is admirable to see or hear of a Female, whose active Soul can disengage it self from the common Frailties of Women, and perform things scarce below the Power of Mascaline Virtue.

If thou thinkest my Letter too tedious, accuse thy self for commanding me to write of Persons whose uncommon Gifts and transcendent Virtues, the most accurate Historians can but render in Epitome; and the most durable Records of Fame will injure in not being capable to transmit them to Eternity.

We ought not to contemn the Excellencies of the Nazaranes; who, though they are unhappy in not knowing the Alteran, yet they have a Law engraven on their Hearts; which if they observe, they shall be in the Namber of the Bleffed.

I am no Stranger to thy Moderation and Justice, being fully satisfied, that thou honour-est Virtue, even in the most prejudiced Enemy of our boly Profession. Let the Furios's among the Mussumans on Christians say their Pleasure, thou and I shall be conformable to our boly Lawgiver, in believing, That the innocent and good of all Religions shall bave no Reason

Digitized by Google

Reason to tremble at the second Sound of the Trumpet.

Paris, 17th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XII.

To the Selictar Aga, or Sword-Bearer to the Grand Signior.

THE Duke of Orleans is newly return'd from the Campaign in Flanders. He seems to be either tired with his Fatigues of War, or at least to be satisfy'd with his Exploits this Summer.

After the Conquest of Courtrey, of which thou hast heard in the Divan, this Prince march'd directly to Bergues, which he took after a Siege of Six Days. Then being join'd by the Duke of Enguien's Forces, he lay down before Mardyke. This Town had been in the Spaniards Possession ever since last Wister. Now it held out to a Miracle: but after a stout Resistance, was at last sorced to surrender. There were slain before it, many of the chief Nobility of France. The French enter'd it on the four and twentieth of the last Moon.

The Churches here are hung with Mourning, and the Escutcheous of the Heroes, who lost their Lives in the Bed of Honour. The Bullets which know no difference between the noble and valgar, feem in this Battel to have been directed by Art or Envy: As if the Flower of the Army had been cull'd out for Marks.

In

In a Letter to Murat Bassa, I gave an Account of a grievous Draught and Mortality in these Parts. Now Heaven seems to be pacify'd; and the Angel of Death has put up his Sword. Yet the Scarcity of Corn, and other Necessaries, continues still; only there is Plenty of Wine; which the poor, who have most Need of it, abstain from, left it should enrage their Appetites, already sharpen'd with Hunger, whilst they have little or nothing to eat.

Thou wilt wonder at the Diet of those miserable Wretches, whom Oppression and Poverty has forced to feed on Progs and other Vermin; yet they extol it for a dainty Dish. Both poor and rich reckon it a Feast, when they can make an Addition of a sew Musbromes, which they commonly gather themselves. This is a Vegetable, of which the Italian Proverb says, Mushromes well pickled with Spices, may do no Harm, but can do no Good.

God, who has commanded us to feparate the clean from the impure, and has taught us what we may eat without Pollution, grant, that we may not, either through Necessity, or to indulge our Appetites, taste of any thing, which has in it the least of the seven Maledictions.

Paris, 14th of the 9th Moca, of the Year 1646.

LET-

LETTER XIII.

To Abubechir Hali, Merchant, in Aleppo.

HOU tellest me a tragical Story of one of thy Wives, that she is become a Fugitive, and gone away with thy Slave Lorenzo, whom I remember to have seen at thy House at Constantinople. Either thou wert too unkind to them both, or gavest them both too much Liberty: Whichsoever of these Ways thou hast exceeded, thou art in the Fault. Too great an Indulgence, either to a Wise or a Servant, makes them pressumptuous: And too great Severity hardens them to Despair. However, since it is so, I advise thee to comfort thy self with this Thought, that thou art rid of two Evils. Had they provid faithful, they would not have merited that Title; but now they are neither worthy of thy Grief, nor of thy Revenge.

But if thou art resolv'd to pursue them, ask not my Counsel or Assistance in this Place, where I should have as much Reason to apprehend Danger, as they. 'Tis true, I know thy Slave; but were I to meet him, in the Streets of this City, I should be very unwilling, by discovering him, to be made known my self. Besides, thy Passion has made thee forget, that the Nazarenes would commend his Wit, and rejoice in his Fortune, who being a Slave to one whom they esteem an Insidel, has now, by his wise Conduct, purchased both his Liberty, and a beautiful Mate, with no small Treasure.

I rather advise thee to apply thy self to Jasmir Sgire Rugial, the little Astrologer in Aleppe, who perhaps

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 145

perhaps may tell thee some News of 'em. There is not a Star in the eighth Sphere can stir, without his being privy to it. And he pretends to behold in their Motions, whatever is done on Earth.

But to be serious, thy Slave was an ungrateful Fellow, thus to abuse all thy Favours. Thou hadst made him in a manner Master of all thy Riches, only reserving thy Wives to thy self. And if the Desire of Liberty tempted him to escape, he ought in Justice to have sacrificed his Lust to the Regards he ow'd thee. But every Slave is not a Joseph. Lorenzo's Villany puts me in mind of the Continence of an Italian Marquis....

This young Lord fell in Love with a Duchels of fingular Beauty, but knew not how to make her sensible of it. At length Fortune favour'd him with an Opportunity, beyond his Expectation. One Evening, as he return'd from Hawking, he pass'd though the Fields of that Duchess, bordering on the Palace. The Duke her Husband. and she, were walking together, as the young Lord came by. The Duke seeing his Train, and what Game they had been at, ask'd him some Questions concerning their Sport, and being of an hospitable Disposition, invited him into his Palace to take a Collation. Nothing could be more agreable to the young Lover. He acceptted the Offer, and here commenc'd an Acquaintance, which made way in Time for an Assignation between the Duchess and him. He was let into the Gardens one Night, and so conducted privately to her Chamber, where the lay ready in Bed to receive him. After some Compliments, the Duches said, My Lord, You are obliged to my Husband for this Favour: who, as soon as you were gone from our House, the first time we faw you, gare gave you such Commendations, as made me conceive an immediate Passion for you. Is it true, Madam? (reply'd the young Lover already half undress'd) Then far be it from me, to be so ungrateful to my Friend. With that he put on his Garments again, and took his Leave.

But it cannot be expected that so much Virtue should be found in a Slave. I would not have thee vex thy self for what cannot be recover'd.

Paris, 14th of the 9th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XIV.

To Solyman bis Cousin.

Cannot approve thy Singularity, in prescribing to thy self a Rule of Life, different from that wherein thou wert educated, and from the laudable Manners of all true Believers. Thou hast not done well in deserting the publick Congregations of the Faithful, to follow the Superstitions of new upstart Sests; who, whilst they profess greater Purity than others, do secretly undermine the Credit of our boly Lawgiver, reproach all the Mussulmans throughout the World, and introduce Libertinism, and a Contempt of the Majesty which cannot behold Uncleanness.

Are they wifer than their Fathers, who for fo many Ages have obey'd the facred Traditions? Or, will they pretend to correct the Messenger of God? He commanded us to observe the Purifications taught by the Angel: Whence do these Innovators derive their new-founded Authority of dispensing with the positive Injunctions of Heaven? Will they enter into the Blasphemy of the Infidels? and fay, the Prophet was a Seducer, and that the Alcoran is but a Collection of Fables? If they believe the Pages replenish'd with Truth and Reason, why do they feek to retrench the Divine Commandments, and traverse the Law transported from Heaven? Is it an Argument of their Piety, that they carve out to themselves such a Religion as suits with their licentious Spirits? And, that they pick and chuse such Precepts, as indulge themmost in a careless Life? Is this to be Mussulmans, that is, refign'd, when they will not obey the fovereign Lawgiver of Heaven and Earth, but upon their own Conditions? Coufin, I counsel thee, to beware of these Schismaticks; who by breaking the Union of the true Believers, secretly oppose the eternal Unity it felf, on which our mighty Empire is founded and refts.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 147

I am obliged to the Post, who waits at my Door, till I have finish'd my Dispatches. Therefore I cannot now answer thy Letter at large: Another time expect a more ample Exposulation Mean while, I advise thee, To return to the Practice from which thou art fallen: Go to the Assemblies of those, who pour out devout Oraisons: keep a clear Skin, and a pure Heart; and make not thy felf a Companion of Swine.

Paris, 24th of the 10th Meen, of the Year 1646.

Digitized by Google

LET-

LETTER XV.

To Hasnadar Bassy, Chief Treasurer to the Grand Signior.

HIS Day Paris makes a Figure like ancient Rome, when that Miffress of the World honour'd her Generals with publick Triumphs, at their Return from the conquer'd Nations. The Streets are hung with Tapestry, and strew'd with Lawrels: The Shops are shut up. The young Men and Virgins are cloathed in their best Array. They walk up and down in Consorts, singing the Duke of Enguien's Praise; whilst the old and decrepid sit at their Doors to see the Hero make his Entry, and rehearse the Memoirs of their former Years. With Tears of Joy they heap Blessings on the victorious Youth, as he rides along; And throwing their Age and Crutches by for a while, they consecrate the rest of the Day to the publick Jubiles.

Would'st thou know the Occasion of all this Joy: 'Tis to welcome this Prince home from the successful Toils of Wars. For let his Courage and Conduct be what it will, if he had made a fruitless Campaign, his Entertainment had been different. But Fortune has been propitious to him; and the happy Event of his Arms crowns him with Glory.

After the Departure of the Duke of Orleans from the Camp, the Command of the whole Army devolv'd on this General, whose fiery Genius would not let him rest, till he had done something worthy of the Character he aim'd at.

His first Attempt was on a Place of no great Strength called Furnes, which he took with Ease.

Then

Then he march'd to Dunkirk, one of the strongest Towns in Europe. There was in it at that time a Garrison of Five and twenty hundred Foot, and Three hundred Horse, commanded by a Nobleman of great Valour. I think they call him the Marquis de Leide. This Governour did so many brave Things in Defence of this Place, as even surpass'd his own Fame, and the Expectations of others, though both were very great. Yet at length he was forc'd to yield to the Courage and Fortune of the young Duke; and that at a Time when the other Spanish Generals were coming to his Relief. The Town was furrender'd on the 7th of this Moon. And the Duke having left the necessary Commands to the Mareschals his Lieutenants, to come home to receive the Acclamations of the People, the Honour of a publick Triumph, the particular Careffes of the King, and the whole Court. Amidst all this Applause and Glory, must be content to stand the Shock of Envy, which always endeavours to lessen the Reputation of the brave and heroick.

As for Mahmut, he neither envies nor admires the fading Honours of Mortality: Knowing, That when a Man is on the highest Pinnacle of Humane Glory, he stands uneasy; nor can he descend from thence, but by a Precipice.

Paris, 24th of the 10th Moon, of the Year 1646.

H 3

LET-

LETTER XVI.

To Ibrahim Hali Cheik, a Man of the Law.

IF it be a Sign of a flourishing State, when I Vices are suppress'd, one would presage, That Paris is in a thriving Condition The Governour of this City has newly publish'd an Editt, Forbidding all Stews and Brotbel-Houses under severe Penalties; banishing all Harlots, and such as by the Toleration of the Government have hitherto made a Profession of Whoredom, getting a Livelihood by debauching the Youth of the City. This appears a great Novelty to the French, who in this Matter have been permitted all along to live in an unbridled Licentiousness. The lewder fort exclaim with open Mouth against this unseafonable Rigour, (as they call it;) and those who are ashamed to appear publick Advocates for Harlots, yet privately murmur against the Superiors, for retrenching a Liberty, without which, they fay, their Lives would be uncomfortable.

They give a very favourable Character of a Whore; calling her, Acertain kind Creature, born to mitigate the Labours, and foften the Cares of Humane Life. They plead, That such Women are necessary Members of a Commonwealth; whilst with their Caresses they restrain libidinous Youth from falling into greater Enormities: That the States receive no small Prosit from the Tribute, which is levied on these Houses of Pleasure; and that therefore they have been, and are permitted in all Countries. That the boly Father himself tolerates an Infinite Number of them in Rome, which nevertheless has acquired the the Title of the Holy City. That all the Princes in Italy have follow'd his Example, there being no other way to prevent Adulteries, Incests, and the Vice which ought not to be named. That the State regarded not the Morality or Immorality of Mens Actions, any farther than they tended to the publick Welfare: And in fine, that so vast a Number of Priests, and Religious, served for no other End, but to atone by their Sacrifices, Prayers, Alms and Fastings, for the Sins of the People.

These are the Discourses of such as patronize the Corruption of Government; and are unwilling to be wean'd from a Wickedness, establish'd by immemorial Custom in the City. But those who cherish an Esteem for Virtue, and an incorrupt Life, applaud the Wisdom and Resolution of the Magistrate, saying, That he deserves a Statue to be erected to his Memory, who first had the Courage to check this popular Euil, and introduce an Integrity of Manners.

I, who was bred in the Profession of Purity, and the Law which admits no Pollution, cannot but acquiesce to the Sentiments of the latter; our boly Law giver having expressly forbidden the Practice of Uncleanness and Fornication with Strangers, and Women that prostitute themselves to all Lovers. It being sufficient, That to gratify Human Passion, and to sweeten the Toils of Life, he has indulged us the Use of sour Wives, and as many other Femiles as we can purchase, either by the Sword, or Money.

Adieu, sage Cheik; and, if I have interrupted thy more important Studies with so trivial a Subject, believe, That it is for want of a proper Occasion to signific to thee, how much thou art in my Thoughts; and that I would H 4 not have our Friendship die through too long Silence.

Paris, 24th of the 10th Meen, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XVII.

To Mustapha, Bassa of Silistria.

HE Fortune of War has ravish'd Asac from the Grand Signier, but has not robb'd thee of the Glory thou acquiredst three Years ago in the Conquest of that City, nor sullied thy present Arms with any Marks of Disgrace, that were of late so vigorously employ'd to relieve it. Had the Muscovites perform'd the same part, when thou didst encircle that Nest of Pyrates with the Ottoman Forces, as they have now done, the Coffacks would not then so tamely have abandon'd their native Seat, and left the Characters of their Despair, imprinted in the Ruins of their Habitations. The Protection of that potent Crown has given them new Vigour; and 'tis to the Valour of those Northern Salvages they owe the Liberty they now enjoy, to fit by their own Fires.

The Muscovites are a fierce and warlike Nation, inur'd to Hardships from the Womb. The Midwives plunge the new-born Infants in cold Wazer; and if they out-live not that Tryal, the Mother thinks her Child not worth a Tear. The Women have no partial Tendernesses for their Babes, but cherish all for the Service of their Country. They teach them, when young, to rowl rowl in Snow, and bathe themselves in Ice disfolv'd to Water. They make them familiar with the Extremities of Heat and Cold, Hunger, Thirst and Labour, that when they come of Age, and can bear Arms, they may go boldly to the Wars, and bravely throw their Lives away to serve the publick Good. In this they feem to revive the Wisdom of the ancient Spartams, who gloried in nothing so much, as in educating their Youth hardly, and free from the effeminate Softness of other Nations. They esteem'd Infancy and Youth the Spring-time of good Manners, when Virtue is in the Blossom: If that be nipp'd or blatted, the Fruit must prove abortive, and unprofitable. Therefore they took Care to season their early Years with wholfome Instructions and masculine Exercises.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 153

Who, among the Warlike Ofmans, does not laugh at the unmanly Education of the Perfian Sophi's, who being for so many Years confined to the Company and Discipline of Females, seem sitter to be made Overseers of a Nursery than to ascend a Throne?

But thou wilt say, I take large Leaps from the North of Europe to one of the most Southern Tracts in Asia. I was discoursing of the Muscovites, and the Assistance they afforded the Cossacks in recovering Asia. I passed from thence to the Manner of their Education. Permit me now to divert thee with something peculiar and uncommon, in the Character of the Russan Women. I am acquainted with a Gentleman in this City, who has travell'd through all that Part of Europe, and resided some Years at Mostow. He says, the Russan Wives think themselves not beloved by their Husbands, unless they beat them every Day. They take his Correction as a Marks of his Favour and Esteem. If these silly Females H 5 are angry or peevish, he has no other way to ccurt them into a better Humour, but by Stripes. This is the only convincing Argument of his Sovereignty over them, the Demonstration of his Manhood, the Charm which fastens both their Love and Obedience.

He highly applauds the absolute Resignation which the People shew to their great Duke, in that they pretend not to possess their Estates and Lives, but through his Favour, and during his Pleasure. He says, the Succession of the Czars, or great Dukes of Russia, was in former Times determin'd after this manner. A great Stone was placed in a large Field belonging to the City of Moscow: When any Czar died, his Sons, or the next of Kin, were conducted into this Field, and placed all at an equal Distance from the Stone. Then, at a certain signal given, they all ran together toward it; and he that first reach'd it, so as to stand on the Top of it, was establish'd in the Thrane.

The Reverence which these People pay totheir Prince, may, in part, be ascribed to his seldom appearing in Person to them, and then surrounded with his Boyars or Nobles, in the most magnificent Equipage that can be supposed proper to strike a Terror and Awe into his Subjects, and cause them to honour him as little less than a God. The Eyes of the Vulgar are dazled with so many Splendors of Silver, Golds. and Jewels; and when the great Duke makes his solemn Appearance, or Cavalcade, they are almost ready to think, that Heaven has descended to Earth, to do them the Honour of a Visit. These are the Arts of Russian Policy, by which such an infinite Number of People are charm'd into an Obedience to the Sovereign. Doubtless the Majefty of a King receives no small Lustre from external external Ornaments; the Multitude being captivated with whatsoever is gay and glittering. Yet our glorious Sultans scorn to borrow Advantage from, or owe their Grandeur to, any thing but their exalted Blood, and sublime, innate Virtues.

But every Nation have their peculiar Customs, and distinct Reasons of State. The Constitution of all Government is not alike. The Model of Lacedamonian Policy would suit ill with Athens.

Thou, whose Education was in the Royal Seraglio of the Osman Emperors; who hast been instructed to imitate the Bee, which sucks Honeyfrom every Flower: Thou that knowest how to make a Choice of good Examples, and to reject the ill; practise the Valour of one Nation, the Prudence of another, the Frugality of a third; so shalt thou be consummate in Virtue, and acquit thy self a good General.

Paris, 15th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XVIII.

To Solyman Kyzlar Aga, Chief of the Black Eunuchs.

Am just now return'd to my Chamber, from the Palace of the King. As I pass'd along the Streets, I saw in every Face the Signatures of a' profound Sorrow, which seems to have diffused it self over their whole Bodies; for both the H 6

Court and City have put on Mourning for the Death of Henry Bourbon, late Prince of Conde.

He was not full fixty Years of Age, when he left this visible World, to be new born in a Region utterly unknown to Mortals. The French, not without Reason lament the Loss of a Man, who, to speak the least of him, buoy'd up the domestick Interest of this Kingdom, which seem'd otherwise inclining to totter. He was the Balance which pois'd the different Passions of the Court and City, by his Prudence and Justice calming both into a peaceable Mediocrity.

He was born forme Moons after his Father's Death, whom the most execrable Method of murdering would not suffer to spin out those Years which Nature would have indulg'd him, being fnatch'd away by Poison.

Henry IV. so long as he remain'd without Issue, fix'd his Eyes on this posthumous young Prince, and gave him an Education suitable to one whom Faith had design'd to be the Heir of the Crown. When the Prince had married Charlotte the Duke of Montmorancy's Daughter, whom Henry IV. loved to a Degree of Passion.

It is dangerous to have a sovereign Prince one's Rival in Love. That Match had well night ruin'd the young Prince of Conde. He was forced to fly into Holland with his Princess, and make that Province the Sanctuary of her Honour. From thence he travell'd through Germany, and return'd not to France, 'till after the Murder of Henry IV.

During the Minority of Lewis XIII. he headed the Factions, affecting to become popular. Were it not this Ambition, his Life had been without Blemish, and he might have blown out Diogenes his Mid-day Candle. But no Man is free free from Fault. All the Difference between the virtuous and vicious confifs in this, That one commits fewer Crimes than the other, and those not by Intention or Habit, but through the insuperable Proclivity of Nature. Every Man has his genial Vices, his Conflictational Errors, and tho' he may appear a Saist in all things else, yet in these he will still be a Sinner.

He suffer'd Five Years Imprisonment in the Bastile, which is a Place put to the same Use, as the Castle of the seven Towers in Constantinople. The Princes his Wife was his Companion all the time, and shared in his Missertunes, as well as his Prosperity.

During that tedious Confinement he became Father of a Daughter, who was afterwards married to the Duke of Longueville. And when he was fet at Liberty, he begot the Duke of Enguien, now Prince of Conde, and the Prince of Conti.

The French speak well of the departed Prince. He was of a lively Spirit, chearful and affable in Conversation, mixing daily Recreations with his severer Business, regularly observing Order in all his Affairs. Yet they say he was covetous, having heaped up great Treasures by a Parsimony, which none of that Blood had ever before practised.

On his Death-bed he recommended two things to the Practice of his Son, the Duke of Enguien; Never to revenge a private Injury; and, Freely to bazard bis Life for the publick Good.

I chose to transinit to thee the News of this Prince's Death, with this brief Account of his Life, and Characters of his Disposition, in regard thou hast seen him in Germany, and I remember to have heard thee speak in his Praise.

Conti-

Continue to love Mahmut, who is never forgetful to oblige his Friends.

Paris, 15th of the 11 th Moon, of the Year 1646

LETTER XIX.

To the Kaimacham.

HE Pofts from Catalonia came in last Night. laden with ill Newsfrom the Army, which has been forced to decamp from before Lerida, leaving the greatest part of their Artillery to the Spaniards. That Place was always fatal to the French. Yet the Passion of the Court vents its self on the Count d'Harcourt because he could not reverse the Decrees of Destiny. All his former meritorious Actions seem now to be cancell'd by this one Difgrace, though it was unavoidable: So peevish are Princes, when their Expectations are cross'd. Some suspect him guilty of private Correspondence; others tax him with Cowardise. All this is during the Heat of their Resentments: . The same Persons, it may be, will change their Censure when they consider, That he had lain before it seven Moons, even 'till the Trenches of his Camp were fill'd with Snow, and that his Soldiers died of Famine or Cold: For the Winter began to be insupportable, and the Country was barren of all Things necessary to sustain such an I cannot see wherein this General deferves Reproach; unless it be a Crime to be a Man, and to have the Command of fuch as are made of Flesh and Blood as well as he,

In-

In Italy, the French have taken Piombino and Porto Longone. This latter is the most important Town in the Isle of Elbe, yet was not able to sustain above nineteen Days Siege.

They fay, There is a Fountain in this Island. whose Waters flow at the Sun-rising, but in the Evening are dried up. The Superstitious have odd Conceits of this Fountain relishing of the ancient Pagan Vanities; but the learned attribute it to Natural Causes. So the Jews tell of a River in the Eafl, that stands still on the Seventh Day of the Week. This they adduce as a Confirmation of their Law, which commands them to rest from Labour on the Seventh Day, because on that Day God rested from forming the Creatures of the World. They say also, That the Satyrs and other Monsters of the Desart, shun the Light of the Sun that Day; hiding themselves in Caverns of the Earth, and curfing the Sabbath because it surprized God before he had quite finish'd their Forms; for which Reason they are impersed and monstrous to this Day.

The Divine Unity, who is the Root of all Numbers, and has confecrated the Number Seven to many mysterious Ends, grant, That neither thou, nor I may forget the Answers we must give to the Seven Questions of the Porter of Paradife.

Paris, 7th of the 12th Moon, of the Year 1646.

LET-

LETTER XX. To Bajazet, Baffa of Greece.

T appears to me by evident Symptoms, that there is some deep Design a foot in this Court. The Grandees affemble often, and fit late. Extraordinary Couriers are fent out, and come in at all Hours of the Night. Strange Reports are industriously spread about the City. Trading is at a Stand, the Banquiers reserv'd, and little Money stirring, which makes the Populace murmur. They complain of the Times, as is usual in publick Discontents: The old discourage and incense the young, by making Comparisons of this Age and Reign, with the happy Days of Henry the Great. They fill their Ears with Golden Stories of former Times; and inspiring into them a Love of the past, they equally introduce a Hatred of the present Government. These are the common Artifices of Faction; and though mone appears yet under any distinct Name or Title, yet it is easy to prognosticate from these Preludes, that e'er long the Mask will be taken off, and Sedition will shew her self barefaced.

T'other Day a Fellow run crying through the Streets, God fave the King, but the Devil take the Italian. He was follow'd by a few, and those of the most contemptible. Yet no Officer or Magistrate in this City would cause him to be apprehended, or attempt to suppress the Mutiny he was raising. The Citizers smil'd at his Boldness, and Money was brought him from unknown Hands: The Women bless'd him as a Prophet, and the Virgins fell down before the Altars.

Altars, on his Behalf: The Temples were crowded with Votaries, or rather with the Fautors of this new Sedition; as if they strove to draw their Gods into the Cabal, and would make Heaven it self abet their Tumults. His Train increas'd as he measur'd the Streets; 'till at length he was seiz'd by the Royal Guards, the Rabble dispersed and all things restored to Quiet. That Night a double Watch was kept throughout the City; the Fellow was strictly examin'd, and put to the Rack; yet no Confession could be extorted from him, fave That the publick Good induced him to take this Course: That the Tyranny and Oppression which Cardinal Mazarini exercised were insupportable: And that he was ready to facrifice his Life for the Welfare of bis Country. He is condemn'd to the Gallies during his Life. And great Endeavours are used to find out the Authors of this Novelty. For he is looked on but as an Instrument set at work by some Male-contents of higher Quality, and the Fore-runner of some more formidable Infurrection.

Proclamations are iffued out, to forbid all Discourse of State Matters: But the People spare not to whisper their Sentiments.

The young King is taken ill, which augments the publick Jealoufy: Men shake their Heads, and look dejected, as they walk along the Streets. Some menace Revenge with their surrow'd Brows; others speak openly, That the Kingdom is fold to Strange. A general Consternation and Disorder has seiz'd all, while their Fears prompt them daily to expect a Change. To obviate the Mischiess which those popular Passions threaten, Soldiers are drawn from divers Parts of the Country by Mazarini's Order, and by insensible Companies quarter'd up and down Paris. Between these and the Citizens, there happen divers divers Quarrels, frequent Murders are committed: While the Night, which covers all Things with Darkness, serves to shroud their mutual Outrages, and private Revenges. Thus the publick Calamities are cherish'd: What will be the Issue, Time will evince.

In the mean while, the Affairs of Germany and Swedeland, seem to be in a fair way of Composure. Divers Treaties are on Foot in order to a general Peace in Christendom. The Embassars and Deputies of the several contesting Crowns have frequent Conferences. But each Party insists so vehemently on Circumstantials, that nothing but fruitless Demurs conclude their Meetings. France has a great Stroke in all these Affairs: And 'tis grown to a Proverb, That Cardinal Mazarini carries all the Courts of Europe in bis Bosom.

The Swedes treat like Victors; and the Germans, tho' much enfeebled, yet cannot forget the Majefly of the Imperial Sceptre. The Danes have an Interest to prosecute, and the Poles are not without their Pretensions. National Pride and Honour have a great Influence on these Crowns. But the Hollanders, like Merchants, ast according to the Rules of Profit. They stand on no Punstilioes, but such as advance their Traffick; knowing that Money is the Nerves of War. In this they are to be esteem'd wise, their Commonwealth being as yet but in her Nonage: Her Strength not knit, nor she in a Capacity to wrestle with her potent Neighbours.

England finds Business enough at Home, to employ both her Money, Wit and Arms. Nor can she be at Leisure to attend to foreign Transactions.

Spain ever follows the Interest of the German Court, it being the unalterable Maxim of the House

House of Austria, to remain united, and aggrandize it self.

Italy has various Interests; and Venice in particular, is in strict Friendship with this Court.

Portugal is still upon her Guard, against the restless Spaniards: And Don Juan de Braganza makes foreign Alliances.

The supreme Monarch of the visible and invisible Worlds, who sits on the Throne of Adamant, under the Covers of the eternal Tree, grant, That the Distractions of these Insidel Princes and States may continue, 'till the Time appointed by Fate shall come, wherein the faithful Osmans shall possess the Red Apple.

Paris, 25th of the 1st Moon, of the Year 1646.

LETTER XXI. To Pestelihali, bis Brother.

Thought my self forgotten by the Son of my Mother, who has suffer'd so many Decads of Moons to measure out the Term of his unkind Silence, and of my Melancholy. 'Tis now three Years since I heard from thee: But I will not complain of a Fault so ingenuously expiated, though late. Thou hast made me ample Amends, in sending me such an elaborate and succinct History of thy Travels: In reading of which, I know not whether my Pleasure or Profit is greater. Thou hast so interwoven delightful Adventures of thy own, and pleasant Passages of others, with curious and folid Observations

Digitized by Google

fervations, that a Man improves himself insenfibly, whilst the charming Language and Miscellany serve as a Spur at once to rowze and fasten his Attention to Points of most useful Knowledge.

The Christians are spt to despise the true Believers as a Company of ignorant People, unacquainted with the World, unpolish'd both in their Understandings and Manners, not vers'd in the liberal Sciences, nor addicted to the Study of any thing, but Riches and Honour, and how to augment the Muslulman Empire. They consider not at the same time, That God has made us rational Creatures as well as them; has endued us with the same natural Faculties; and, That in all Nations he has inspir'd some with a Thirst of Knowledge, furnishing them also with the Abilities and Means to attain it. They confider not, That if Printing be prohibited among us, 'tis to suppress the Multitude of unprofitable Books, with which Europe too much abounds: And that in their stead we have many thousands of industrious Scribes, whose whole Employment is to translate the most excellent and learned Treatifes of the Ancients. And, That consequently, a studious Mabemetan cannot be destitute of such Beoks, as may instruct him in true Philosophy, sound Morals, and History of the most memorable Transactions in the World. Assuredly, our Arabia may boast of her Avicens, Mesues, Averroes, Halis, and Albumazars; and that the has brought forth many others who need not, in any Point of Humane or Divine Learning, yield the Palm to the most eminent Doctors, Philosophers, Orators and Poets, among the Christians.

Add to this the equal Benefit some of our Belief reap, by travelling into foreign Countries, which crowns all their Studies with experimental rimental Knowledge and Wisdom; rendring them as familiar with the different Natures of Men, and the various Constitutions of Government, as before they were with Books.

This appears evident in thy Letter, which is replenish'd with so many solid Remarks and sage Comments on the Laws and Customs of the Regions through which thou hast pass'd, their Religions, Strength and Riches, and whatsoever else was worthy a Traveller's Notice; that were this Narrative publish'd in Christendom, the Nazarenes would forbear to speak so contemptibly of the true Believers.

But they flatter themselves with a false Notion, that the Ottomans never travel beyond the Limits of their own Empire, except the publick Chiauses, who are fent by the Grand Signior. They are ignorant, that the august Port maintains private Agents in all Nations; and that there is hardly any Prince's Court in Christendom without a Musfulman in it one time or other. Tis true, we appear not in the Garb peculiar to the East. Our Mission requires a Conformity to the Fashions of the People where we reside. But we still retain the interior Vestment of Mahometan Purity, being in a double Sense circumcifed. Thus we become Masters of the Christians Secrets, whilst they account us flupid, ignorant, and Men void of common Senfe.

Besides, had we not this Advantage in these Western Parts, yet the universal Privilege of travelling and maintaining free Commerce over all the East must needs afford great Opportunities of Accomplishment to some among the Caravans of so many thousands as visit Persia, India, China, Tartary, and all Places where the Faith of the Missioner of God is professed.

I am extreamly pleas'd with thy fortunate E-fcapes from Robbers on the Road, whose Malice, rarely extends farther than to deprive a Man of those outward Goods, which, if he be wife, he will not call bis own. Much more am I delighted with thy Deliverance from those Female Thieves, who steal from Men their Hearts and Reason, which last is our noblest, and only proper Inheritance. All Persia and the Indies abound with Courtezans; and he had need of Osman's Chastity, who would withstand so many and strong Temptations.

Thou needest not wonder at the Effeminacy of the present Mogul, who suffers himself and his State to be govern'd by Women. That subtle, and aspiring Sex, have always sought to undermine or over-reach our Race. They keep behind the Scenes, yet act their Parts in all the Tragedies and Revolutions of the World. The Father of the present Indian King made an absolute Refignation of his Sovereignty to his Queen, for four and twenty Hours. This Prince by a ftrange Affectation, called himself King of the World. His Wife was the Daughter of an Arabian Captain, who had served him in the Wars: But having forfeited his Head by some notorious Treason, his Daughter went and threw herself at the Mogul's Feet to beg his Life. He fell passionately in Love with her, (for she had not her Equal for Beauty in all the East) granted her Petition, and married her. Afterwards fhe got fuch an Empire over him that he would do nothing without her Advice and Consent. At her Infligation he made War or Peace: And to please her cruel Humour, he put out the Eyes of his eldest Son. But, not satisfied with these Discoveries of his Love, and resolving to make her felf famous by some extraordinary Action, fhe she never ceas'd solliciting the King, with all the Arts of Female Policy, till she had prevail'd on him, to furrender up his Authority to her for the Space of a Day. In which Time (having prepared all things before hand ready for her Purpose) she caused two Millions of Roupies, in Silver and Gold, to be coin'd and stamp'd with the twelve Signs of the Zodiack, contrary to the fundamental Laws of the Empire, the express Probibition of our boly Prophet, and the universal Practice of the Musfulmans throughout the World, who admit not the Representations of any Creatures that have Life. This Relation I had from my Uncle Useph, who resided in the Indian Court Eleven Years. He added moreover, That during this short Female Reign, she cut off the Heads of Seven Grandees, the most zealous for the Mussulman Faith among all the Indian Princes, and establish'd as many Idolaters in their Places: And that, if her Orders had been fully executed, she had quite changed the Government, consecrated the most beautiful Mosques to the Service of Idols, exterminated the true Faithful, and restored the ancient Abominations of the Infidels; which thou wilt not think impracticable, when thou considerest, That the Number of the Uncircumcifed in the Indies, far exceeds that of the Mussulmans, there being ten thousand of those, to a hundred of such as profess the Unity of the divine Nature. ever, there was Loyalty found even among those Pagans; and they would not suffer a blind Zeal for the Worlds of their Gods, to supplant the Duty they ow'd their King.

The Description thou hast made of Candabar, and the Method thou hast projected to take that impregnable City, discover at once thy Conduct and Diligence, in procuring Liberty to survey so narrowly, the most important Place of the

Indies;

Indies; and thy Skill in Fortifications, with the Quickness of thy Invention, which has suggested to thee that which all the Engineers of Asia have never so much as dreamt of. This is the right Use of Travelling, when a Man returns from soreign Nations, cultivated with experimental Knowledge, and stock'd with Improvements, that may render him serviceable to his Country.

Thou condemnest the Injustice and Avarice of the Indian Moguls; who, as foon as any of the Omrabs, or great Men die, cause all his Estate and Goods to be seiz'd, to their own proper Use. Whereby it comes to pass, that the Widow and Children of the Deceased, are reduced to the lowest Condition of Poverty, being many times forced to beg for a Subfiftence. 'Tis true, this is an Oppression not to be justified, especially in those who profess to believe in one God Creator of all Things, the incorrupt Judge of the Universe. But what thinkest thou then of our Sultans, who not having Patience to wait till a natural Death shall make them Heirs to the Wealth of a Bassa. generally secure their Title, and hasten their Possession by a Bow-string? These are Royal Violences: Though the Refignation of Subjects must not tax them with any Crime, who are accountable to none but God.

It was however a notable Piece of Raillery with which the Widow of a rich Merchant reproved this unreasonable Custom in the present Mogul. Her Husband was an Idolater, who had heaped together an infinite Treasure by Trading and Usury; and when he died, left her worth Two hundred thousand Roupies. Her Son, some Years after coming of Age, demanded of her a Stock to set up with as a Merchant. Which the, either out of Avarice, or for other Ends, refused refused him; furnishing him only with such small Sums as served to nourish his Discontent, and tempt him to a lewd, careless Life. But at length. not being able to prevail on his Mother, to part with so much as would answer his Expectations, he complained to the Mogul, disclosing also what Estate his Father had left. The Mogul being informed of so much Riches, sent for the young Man's Mother, and commanded her to send him half her Money, ordering, That the other half should be divided between her self and her Son. The Widow, not being at all furprized, or cast down at this unjust Proposal, made the Mogul this short Reply: O King, may the Gods make thee bappy. My Son has some Reason to require his Share of bis Father's Estate, baving bis Blood running in his Veins; but I desire to know, what Relation thou art to my Husband or me, that thou claimest a Share in his Inheritance The Prince abash'd at so smart and bold an Address, commanded her to give half her Estate to her Son, and so dismiffed her.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 16

I have heard some of our Chiauses praise the Magnificence of the Moguls Court, the infinite Number of his Attendants; But above all, they extol the inimitable Grandeur of his Throne. which is adorn'd with so many Topazies, Rubies, Emeraulds, Pearls, and Diamonds, as amount to thirty Millions of Roupies. But were it not much better, if instead of all this needless Glory, he could boaft, That his Empire is founded in the Hearts of his Subjetts: He does dot consider, That such prodigious Heaps of envied Treasure. are but so many glittering Snares, golden Manacles, which serve for no other Use, but to chain him up from that Freedom, and those more innocent Delights, that the meanest of his Subjects enjoy.

Thou

Thou haft, I perceive, discoursed with the In. dian Bramins: Dost not thou discover, even in these Idolaters, a Contempt of Riches? What mean Thoughts have they of the Splendor and Gayeties of the Court? What a low Esteem of the long and proud Series of Titles, with which the Moguls endeavour to exalt themselves? Whilst they are called the Lights of the World, and Companions of the Sun; these poor Philosophers know, That in a little time they shall be laid in Darkness. and have no better Society than that of Worms. What fignifies their Pedigree, or, That the present Mogul is but the tenth Descendant from the mighty Temurlen, who made all Asia tremble, if he has loft the Virtue of his glorious Ancestor? 'Tis that alone makes all Men truly noble.

Thou tellest me, That the Empire of the Mogul affords him more Revenues than the Dominions of any two the most potent Monarchs on Earth. I have heard as much from others, which convinces me, that thou hast inform'd thy self rightly of the present State of the Indies. But dost thou therefore efteem this Monarch the richer? Confider the vaft Extent of his Bominions, which are faid to contain more than Six hundred Leagues in length, and thou wilt find, that to maintain so great a Track of Ground, both against his foreign and domestick Enemies he is obliged to keep in constant Pay, some Millions of his Subjects and Strangers: For he is in the midst of Enemies, even among his own Subjects. There are above an hundred Sovereigns in his Empire, who perpetually by turns molest his Government, refusing to pay Tribute, and raising Armies against him: Whereby it comes to pass, that he is at an infinite Expende to defend himself, and carry on those endless Wars; thou thy felf having observ'd that once in two Moons there is an indispensable Necessity of paying these prodigious Armies: Not a Soldier throughout his Empire having any thing to live on, save the Wages he receives of the King.

Consider also, that this Monarch always keeps some thousands of the sinest Horses in the World near his Person, such as cost him thousands of Roupies a-piece; besides a thousand Elephants; with an incredible Number of Mules, Camels, and other Beasts of Burden, to carry his Wives, his Goods and Provisions, when he takes the Field: That whole Cities, even as large as Constantinople, are obliged to follow the King's Camp for Subsistence, their Livelihood altogether depending on the Army. Add to this, the immensse Charges of his Seraglio, his Castles and Sea Port Towns, with all the other necessary Expences of the State, and thou wilt conclude, That when this Potentate comes to cast up his Accounts, he will find himself a poor Man.

But I shall cloy thee with a Rehearsal of such things, as thou canst not be a Stranger to.

Only tell me, Whether one of the Raias or Princes subject to the Mogul, be the real Descendent of Porus, the ancient King of India, in the Time of Alexander the Great? I have been told by several Travellers, That there is such an one, that his Name is Rana, and that an hundred of the idolatrous Princes pay Homage to him, as to their natural Sovereign.

Thou confirmed the Truth of what has been so often reported in these Parts, That the Prince of Java had six Fingers on each Hand, and as many Toes on his Feet.

But that seems very strange which thou relatest, of a certain Language among the Indians, which is not vulgarly spoken; but that all their Books of Theology, and Pandests of their Laws, the Records of their Nation, and the Treatises of Human Arts and I 2

Digitized by Google

igitized by GOOGIC

Sciences are written in it. And that this Language is taught in their Schools, Colleges and Academies, even as Latin is among the Christians. I cannot enough admire at this; for, where and when was this Language spoken? How came it to be disus'd? There seems to be a Mystery in it, that none of their Brachmans can give any other Account of this, fave, That it is the Language, wherein God gave, to the first Creature he made, the four Books of the Law: which according to their Chronology, was above thirty Millions of Years ago. I tell thee, my dear Brother, this News has started some odd Notions in my Mind: For when I consider, That this Language, as thou sayest, Has nothing in it common with the Indian that is now spoken, nor with any other Language of Afia, or of the World; and yet, that it is a copious and regular Language, learn'd by Grammar, like the other material Languages; and that, in this obsolete Language, Books are written, wherein it is afferted. That the World is to many Millions of Years old; I could almost turn Pythagorean, and believe, The World to be within a Minute of Eternal. And, where would be the Absurdity? Since God had equally the same infinite Power, Wisdom and Goodness, from all Eternity, as he had five or Six thousand Years ago. What should hinder him then from exerting these divine Attributes sooner? What should retard him from drawing forth this glorious Fabrick earlier, from the Womb of Nothing? Suffer thy Imagination to flart backwards, as far as thou catifl, even to Millions of Ages, and yet thou canst not conceive a Time, wherein this fair unmeasurable Expanse was not stretch'd out. As if Nature her felf had engraven on our Intellects, this Record of the World's untraceable Antiquity, in that our strongest, swiftest Thoughts, are far too weak and slow, to follow Time back to its endless Origin. The

The Revolution in China; surpasses the common Changes in Kingdoms and Empires. There is something excessively tragical, in the Catastrophe of that Royal House.

Brother, in beholding that, thou hast seen Human Nature in a Trance: And thou art so thy self, if, after this, thou canst be fond of any thing on Earth. Traveller, Adieu,

Paris, 25th of the 1st Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXII. To Afis Baffa.

Several Dispatches have been lately sent between this Caurt, and that of Swedeland, containing rather Matter of Compliment, than any thing of great Importance. Queen Christina has been very ill, which has occasion'd Letters of Condolance from the Queen Regent of France.

Those which come from that Part, say, That General Torstenson is made a Count; and the Disnity entailed to his Posterity, in Recompence of his eminent Services to the Swedish Crown.

These Letters add, That there have pass'd some high Words between Monstear Chanus, and the Swedish Secretary of State. And, that the latter, in going out of the Chamber where they discoursed, laid his Hand upon his Sword, with these Words: Monstear Chanut, were it not for the Fenre which the Law of Nations has rais'd about your Person, I would answer you in another Language. To which Monstear Chanut replied, That he wore a Sword to defend himself and his private Honour, as well as any Swede in the Kingdom.

3 The

The Occasion of this Quarrel was, The great Refort of Roman Catholick Strangers to Monfieur Chanut's Chapel, which gave Disgust to the Swedes, who allow not the Exercise of the Roman Religion within their Territories. They castrate all the Priests of that Communion whom they find, and profecute the Laity with rigorous Penalties. But Monfieur Chanut pleaded the Law of Nations: And when the Secretary told him, That the Queen permitted him and his Family the Liberty of their Religion, but defired him not to admit any other Persons of what Nation soever: This Minister replied, That he could not receive as a Favour or Permission from ber Majesty, the Liberty of exercising bis Religion, fince be beld it only of bis Mafter, the King of France, who had fent him thither, and that be would not shut the Door of bis Chapel against any that would come in: That their Law. which, according to their own Galcule, was made about Two thousand Years after the Foundation of their Estate, could not abrogate the Law of Nations, which is eternal: That this perpetual Law gave particular Privileges to certain Perfens, and especially to the Ministers of foreign Princes: That their new Law, such as it was, being only made to maintain the publick Worship, respected not what was done in the House of a foreign Minister, by a Special Privilege, it being of no Consequence to the State, whether fuch Foreigners ferved God or not, or whether they worshipped him in a right or wrong Way: That no Swede came to bis Chapel, but on-A some French, who were Sojourners in the Land: That they did not use the Swedish Ambassadors so in France, who admitted whom they pleased into their Chapels: That the House where he now dwelt, was the House of the King of France; and that therefore he could not by Consequence refuse any Catholicks an Entrance into it, especially such as were born Subjects of his Master: And in fine, That it was very rude to oblige him to be the Executioner of this severe Law, in requiring him to shut his Doors upon his Country-men, against the common Laws of Hospitality, the Honour of a publick Minister, and the Pleasure of the King his Sovereign.

45

To this, the Secretary made fomething too tart a Reply. Whereupon Words increasing between them, and the French Ambassador being resolute to affert his Privilege, the Secretary broke out into a Passion, as I have before mention'd, laying his Hands upon his Sword, as he was leaving the Room.

The Swedes are naturally a rugged, surly People, as are all the Northern Europeans. They are Strangers to Civility, and the gentile Address of the French. Yet the Queen, when she heard of this Passage, was angry with her Minister, and excused his Rudeness to Monsieur Chanut; telling him, That the Secretary was a faithful Servant, but had been educated among the Bears of the Forest.

This puts me in mind of a Story, which the French tell of another Ambassador, whom Lewis KIII. fent to the Court of Spain. The Spaniardi are of a haughty Temper, expecting more than ordinary Submissions, from those who approach the King's Presence. This Ambassador, on the same Ground, was required to do some Homage, which would not consist with the Instructions of his Master, and therefore he resuled to comply. The King of Spain thinking to put him out of Countenance, said aloud, What! has the king of France no other Men in his Court, That he kinds to me such a Fool as this? To which the Ambassador replied, My Master has many wifer Men than my self about him; but to such a King, such an Ambassador.

Thou wilt not perhaps approve such Raillery as this to Crown'd Heads, who ought to be treated with Reverence and Gravity. Yet, I believe, thou wilt condemn the Cruelty of a Duke of Muscovy, who caused the Hat of a French Ambassador to be nailed to his Head, for sitting cover'd before him, This is contrary to the Genius of the East, who abhor to see a Man bare headed.

But every Nation has its Mode: And I according to the Fashion of my Country, kis the Border of thy Vest, in Token of my Submission and Respect.

Paris, 7th of the 2d Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXIII.

To the Mufti, most Venerable, and Worthy of all Honour.

HE Criticks, who spend their Time, and manifest their Wit, in descanting on the Court and the Grandees, find perpetual Matter of Discourse concerning Cardinal Mazarini. His daily Actions furnish them with new Themes, and sometimes they reheasse the old. They compare him with his Predecessor Richlieu, and with Cardinal Ximenes, a Spanish Minister. They term these three, the Trinity of Christian Statesmen; thus distinguishing their personal Characters. Richlieu, they say, was crafty, covetous and revengesul; Ximenes was politick, severe, and valiant; Mazarini is wise, mercitul, and liberal.

The

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 177

The first made good his Character, they say, in heaping up such prodigious Treasures; in raising all those of his Family or Dependence, to the highest Honours; in occasioning the voluntary Banishment of the Queen-Mother; in running whomsoever he suspected; and finally, in making himself so much the Master of all Secrets, that the King, however disgusted and averse from him, yet could never sit safe on his Throne without him, when living, nor venture the Management of the Publick to any of his Creatures, when dead. Thus speak they of that great Minister.

As to Cardinal Ximenes, they say, He discover'd the Qualities which they ascribe to him, in the Method he took to raise himself to that envied Greatnes, which was, by seeming to shun the Honours at which he secretly aim'd. For being a devoted Dervise, or religious Friar, he appear'd to be the most mortify'd Man of the whole Order; Which being taken Notice of, he was made Provincial; from which Dignity, he made but one Step more to the Purple! And, growing eminent for his Abilities, he was made the first Minister in the Court of Spain.

He levy'd Sixteen thousand Men at his own Cost, invaded Barbary, storm'd their strongest Cities, and reduced the whole Kingdom of Tripoli and Algiers, to his Master's Obedience.

Whilst he was at the Head of his Army, one Day there happen'd a Mutiny among his Soldiers. A certain Fellow, running up and down between the Ranks, and exciting them to chuse a new General, saying, It was a Shame to serve a poorspirited Friar: The Cardinal perceiving this, stepp'd to the Fellow, and, with one Blow, sever'd his Head from his Body. This struck such a Terror into all, that, from that time, there there was not the least Tumult or Disorder in his Army.

They say, he was in the End poison'd by eating of a Filb. of which a Friend of his receiv'd Intimation on the Road, as he was riding to the Place where the Cardinal was at Dinner. But he came too late, to prevent the Effects of the Poifon: For though the Cardinal was but just risen from the Table yet he began to void Blood by his Ears, and the Extremities of his Fingers; and in a few Days drew his last Breath. He was tall. and well limb'd: His two fore Teeth of the upper Jaw grew so far out of his Mouth, that he was call'd, The Ecclefiaftical Elephant. 'The Sutures of his Skull were so closely indented, that there was no more room for Transpiration of the groffer Vapours, than through the most solid Part of the Bone. On this account he was ever troubled with the Head-ach, contrary to Cardinal Ricblieu, who never felt any Pain in that Part, because he had two little Holes in his Crown, through which the Fumes exhal'd.

These are the Remarks which are made on-Cardinal Ximenes. As to Mazarini, they say, he furpasses both these Ministers, in the exquisite Moderation of his Temper: And comes thort of neither, in the Contrivance or Success of Affairs, being folid in his Counfels, secret and fwift in their Execution. He has this also peculiar in his Conduct, that none are more fure of his Favour, than those who have done him Injuries. He is magnifick in his Expences; building Palaces, that may vie with the most celebrated Structures of the antient Romans: A curious-Collector of choice Paintings and Sculptures; furnishing the Houses with Utensils of Cedar, Ebony, Silver, Gold, and other Ornaments, befitting the Palace of a King. Liberal beyond the Expectation

Vol. III. a SPY at PARIS. 179

Expectation of his Friends and Servants, yet not to Profuseness. He has a wonderful Sagacity in discovering Cheats and Impostors; and no less Dexterity in discerning Men of Merit, though never so much obscur'd by Missortune.

Not long ago he catch'd a Gentleman in a Crime, which expos'd him to the Laughter and Contempt of the whole Court, but not to the Cardinal's Hatred. He had been recommended to this Minister by a Lady of the Court, for whom he had a great Esteem. On which account he had free Access to the Cardinal's Presence, and would always mix with his Retinue.

But his curious Patron had observ'd something in his Carriage, which gave him Ground of Mistrust. For he would always place himself as near as he could to a certain Table in the Chamber, where the Cardinal gives Audience. There is a Drawer under this Table, which commonly stands half open, it being the Place where all Petitioners throw in their Bribes or Prefents; it not being feemly for a Prince of the Church, to take Money himself. The Cardinal observ'd, That this Spark always had his Eye glancing on that Drawer, as if he coveted what was there contain'd. However, he took no Notice, but gave him all the Opportunities imaginable to do his Pleasure; yet still one Accident or other, hinder'd the Gentleman from executing his Design, which was, To borrow some of the Gold that lay in that Drawer. At length it happen'd, That the Cardinal having appointed some curious Pageants to be made in Honour of the King's Birth-day, he, with several of the Courtiers, stood looking out of the Windows to see these triumphant Shows pass by. The Gentleman, taking this Opportunity, whilst he thought all Eyes were intent on the Gayeties 16 without.

without, flips to the Table, and takes out of the Drawer a Bag of Gold, putting it up in his Pocket, and retiring to the Window again. He imagined that no Body had seen him, and therefore hugg'd himself in the Thoughts of his Booty. When the Show was over, and the Company withdrew from the Window; after a while, they all took their leave, and departed: And, among the rest, this Gentleman Thief was going out. But the Cardinal defired him to tarry, in that he had fomething to fay to him. The Gentleman stung with the Guilt of what he had done fell a trembling, and was ready to drop down at the Cardinal's Feet. But he bid him be of good Comfort, faying thus to him; My Friend, what thou haft done, is not bid from me- If thou haft not Gold enough, I will double thy Sum. Therewith he gave him another Bag of equal Value; saying withal, Go thy Way, and fee my Face no more. I pardon, but cannot trust thee.

Would'st thou know, by what means the Cardinal discover'd this Thest? He always wears on his Finger a Ring, in which is set a Jewel of inestimable Value; it being a Natural Mirror, and discovering all Things that are done in the Room, though behind a Man's Back. 'Twas on this Stone the Cardinal cast his Eye, when the Gentlemen thought he was looking our of the Window. Therein he beheld him go to the Table, take out the Money, and put it in his Pocket. Thou sees how curious this Minister is, to stock himself with useful Ranities.

May that great Chancellor of Heaven, the Angel who beholds in the Divine Effence as in a Mirror, whatfoever is done on Earth and records all Human Actions in the Book of Judgments, never differn any thing in Muhmut, which which may render him worthy to be excluded the Presence of God.

Paris, 12th of the 2d Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXIV.

To Danecmar Kefrou, Kadilifquer of Romania.

HOU, that art Principal among the Judges of high Dignity, the illustrious Ornament of three Empires, the strong Support of Equity, who preservest Reason, and correctest Vice, I congratulate thy deserved Honour: And in doing so, I wish Increase of Joy to all the faithful Osmans.

The Knowledge which thou hast acquired in the Law of Nations, and in the most perfect Sanctions of our august Monarchy, has made thee famous through the seven Precinits of the Earth; and has vested thee with the Robe of sublime Honour, the Gift of the Lieutenant of God.

I made Choice of this Oceasion at once to perform my Duty and to acquaint thee with a National Villainy such a Violation of the publick Faith of a Kingdom, as it will be difficult to parallel:

The Civil Warsof England are known throughout the World: And thou art no Stranger to the particular Intelligences I have fent to the fublime Port, concerning that Nation.

Since that time the Robels have by degrees gain'd Ground of their unbappy King, chating him him from one Place to another: 'Till at length, finding, That neither by Arms or Treaties, he could reduce them to any Terms of Reconciliation, and being befieged in one of his Cities, which was not in a Condition to hold out long, this unfortunate Monarch was forced to difguife himself, and escape by Night; wandring through unfrequented Ways, and enduring much Hard-hip. He at length threw himself upon the Faith of the Scots, who had solemnly engaged themselves upon Oath, To defend him against all himselves upon Oath, To defend him against all himselves whatsoever.

The Scottife Army was then in England, being hired to affift the Rebels. Whence some take Occasion to accuse this Prince of Rashness, and too much Credulity, in seeking Protection from those who first began the Rebellion, and who had stain'd the Resords of Scotland with the Blood of many of their Kings. But Innocency is void of Suspicion; and therefore, because his own Intentions were sincere, he knew not how to be jealous of others.

However, the Scots at first seem'd to act the Parts of loyal Men. And when they were threatned by the English Rebels, and their Pay was stopp'd, with Declarations also issued out against their Proceedings, they continued to affert the Justice of their Deportment, in receiving and defending their injur'd King, who had fled to them for Succeur.

They detained him thus, from the 4th of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1646, to the 30th Day of the 1st Moon, of this present Year. At which time, having agreed with the English Parliament, for the Sum of 400000 Sequins, as the Price of their Sovereign they deliver d him up to the English Commissioners, deputed by the Rebels for that Purpose.

The

183

The French Ambaffador was at that time in the Scotch Army; who having been a Witness of their detestable Perjury, took his Leave: And being attended with a Guard of Light-Horse to the Sea Port, at parting he pull'd out a Piece of English Money, valued at Half a Crown; and askking the Captain of the Guards into how many Pieces of coined Silver that Half Crown might be divided, he answered, Into thirty. For so much (replied the Ambassador) did Judas betray bis Master.

Thou wilt better comprehend the Force of this Repartee, when thou considerest, that according to the Christian's Belief, this Judas was a Slave of Jesus, the Son of Mary; and that for thirty Pieces of Silver, he betray'd that Prophet to the Jews.

But these Infidels have found out Ways, to elude all Engagements and Promises. They couch their Oaths, in Words more ambiguous than the Oracles of Delphos. As if they thought not only to circumvent Men by their Equivocations, but also to deceive bim who formed the Tongue and the Ear; even God, who is perfect in Knowledge.

Such a Story I have read of one Hatto a German Bishop, whose Perjury is recorded. This Prelate had a Coufer who was accused of Treason against the Emperor. On which Account he was closely belieged by the Imperial Forces, in a Cafile seated on the top of an impregnable Rock. So that the Emperor, despairing to take him by Force had withdrawn his Army; when this Bishop came to him, and for a Sum of Money promised to betray his Kinsman into the Emperor's Hands.

The Bargain being concluded, the Bifton went to visit his Cousin at the Castle, persivading him to go and humble himself to the Emperer, and he would engage to procure his Pardon: Binding himself with a folemn Oath, That if he would rely on him, as he carried him safe out of the Cafile, so he would bring him back alive and safe again.

His Kinsman, deluded with these fair Pretences, and secured by the Sanzian of an Oath, trusts himself to the Conduct and Fidelity of the Prelate.

er territoria

When they had rode about half a League from the Castle, the Bishop pretending he had forgot some Papers of Moment, which he had left behind him in his Chamber, they return'd back to the Caftle; and when they had found the Papers they set forward again toward the Emperor's Camp. Being arrived there, the impious Wretch deliver'd his Kinsman to the Emperor, who condemn'd him to die. He sending for the Bifbop, reproaches him with the Violation of his Oath. But the perfidious Bifbop fought to acquit himself by saying, He bad perform'd his Promise, in earrying bim back fafe to the Castle, when he return'd to feek bis Papers. Thus was his Kiniman betray'd by a Quibble, and loft his Head. The Bishop acquiring, for that impious Deed, the odious Title of Hatto the Traytor. And the Germans report. That he was afterwards carried away by Devils, and thrown alive into the Hollow of Mount Ætna: A Voice being heard at the same Instant in the Air, saying, This is the Reward of Perjury.

The Nazarenes believe this flaming Mountain to be one of the Months of Hell: The same Opinion they have of Strombolo and Vesuvius. I am not curious to pry into the Truth of so costly a Secret, but leave the Experiment to the forsworn, treacherous Scots, who by this barbarous Action, deserve to follow the Fate of Hatta

Much

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 18

Much greater was the Integrity and Virtue of the ancient Romans, whom these Insidels number among the damn'd. They esteem'd nothing more facred than the publick Faith; building Temples to its Honour and stamping their Money with the Figure of two Hands joined together, having this Motto, THE FAITH OF THE ROMANS. But the Scots shew themselves to be of Lysander's Mind, who used to say, Children must be circumvented with good Words, and Men with Oaths.

This Monarch is now led in Triumph, like a Captive, by his rebellious Subjects, who have confin'd him to one of his Country Palaces, suffering none of his Friends, or faithful Servants, to come near him, but in all things endeavouring to render his Restraint insupportable.

Thou who art accurate in interpreting the Laws of Justice, wilt condemn these Institutes of horrid Treason, yet canst not acquit the Mussulmans, who have often deposed our most august Emperors.

I divide my Intelligence among the Ministers of the sublime Port, and the other Grandees of the State; praying God, to guard the Sultan from secret Machinations, and open Enemies; and, To grant, That an Excess of Good-Nature may now betray him to such Missfortunes, as have befallen this imprison'd Monarch.

Paris, 21st of the 3d Moon, of the Year 1647.

LET-

LETTER XXV.

To Ragel Harnet, Antiquary to the Sultan.

HIS City is pefter'd with an innumerable Multirude of Bats, and a kind of Serpents, which they call Lizards or Newts. They breed in the Walls of their Houses, and molest the Inhabitants Night and Day, swarming more than ordinary every ninth Year.

The Parissans give an odd Reason for this Plague. They fay, That in former Ages, a certain Magician had undertaken to free this City from all venemous Creatures; and that, accordingly, he had made several Images of those Animals, annexing to them Enrbantments, and hiding them in obscure Places under the Earth; promising alfo, That so long as those Images remain'd untouch'd, Paris should not be molested with any hurtful Thing. This succeeded according to his Words; 'till at a certain time, as they were digging up the Foundations of an old Temple, the Workmen found several brazen Images, some representing a Bat, some a Lizard. They making small Account of those magical Reliques, fold them to the next Brafter for a Piece of Money: Who being ignorant also of the hidden Force of these Images, melted them down for his own Use. And, ever fince that time, the City has been over-run with Bats and Lizards.

I relate this to thee, in regard I have often heard thee speak of the ancient Statues, that were in the Atmidam at Constantinople, and in other Parts of the City; particularly of that Pillar, which had three Brazen Serpents winding about it, which when Mabonet the Great beheld, the

· Vol.III. z Spy at Paris. 187

the Conqueror struck one of them with a Battle-Axe, and smote off the lower Jaw. Upon which a multitude of Serpents insested the City, but were soon exterminated, in regard the Sultan, being warned by the Citizens, sorbore to do any farther Injury to those Images, which were the Guardians of the City.

The Annals of the Mussalman Empire make Mention of these Statutes, as also of a Horse of Brass, and a Ball of the same Metal: The one erected as a Charm against the Pessilence; the other, as an oraculous Sign, that the Enemies of the Grecian Monarchy should in that Place be repulsed, and driven out of the City. Yet it proved otherwise: For the victorious Mussalmans against whom the Enchantments of the Insidels could not prevail, enter'd the Market-Place, where this Image stood, and drove from thence the timorous Grecians; cutting in Pieces all that made Resistance, and rendring themselves Lords of Constantinople, at that time the richest City in the World.

The Romans were extremely addicted to these fupershisions Vanities; believing the Sasety of their City and Empire, consisted in the Preservation of the Palladium, an Image which they thought fell down from Jupiter, and was transported from Troy to Italy by Eneas being afterwards reposited in the Temple of Vesta, but burnt in that dreadful Constagration, which happen'd in the Reign of Nero.

They had in no less Veneration the Buckler, which they were taught dropp'd down from Heaven, into the Hands of Numa Pompilius; whereon the Fate of Rome was engraven, in Characters which none could read. Fearing lest this Sacred Shield might be stolen, they caused Eleven others of the same Figure to be made.

and all to be hung up together in the Temple of Mars.

And, to the end the Guardian Genius of the City should not be enticed from them by the Enchantments of their Enemies, the true Name of the City of Rome was kept secret, even from its own Inhabitants; insomuch, that Valerius Soranus was put to Death, for publishing it to one of his Friends. Many have guess'd at the bidden Name; some saying, It was Valencia; others, That it was Velia; a third sort call it Anthusa. But there is no Certainty in their Conjectures. For the Pagans were above all things careful to conceal the Names of their Cities and Patron Gods; knowing, that those Spirits would not forsake them, till they were call'd forth by their profer Names.

They us'd also to chain the Images of their Gods to the Altars, Vest they should depart from them by Stealth. Thus the Tyrians, when Alexander besleged their City, and they understood from the Priess, that Apollo the Guardian of Tyre, was displeased with 'em, they fasten'd his Image with strong Fetters of Iron. So dealt the Spartans with the Image of Mars. And this was the common Practice among those idolatrous Nations. .

As for us, who have received the Law clear and intelligible, and believe in the Unity of the Divine Effence: We use no Charms our selves, neither do we sear the Magick of the uncircumcifed. All our Considence is in God, and the Protection of his Prophet: We go boldly to the Wars, whilst we sight in Desence neither of Statues, nor statious Reliques, but of the Volume replenished with Truth and Light, the Book brought down from Heaven by an Angel.

Paris, 17th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LET-

LETTER XXVI.

To the Vizir Azem.

AM now returned from Orleans, whither I went in Obedience to thy Appointments; and not without abundance of Pleasure to my self, it being the Time of Year when all things conspire to make a Traveller pass his Time away with Delight.

Yet my Return was melancholy, in Regard I could not accomplish what I aim'd at, nor be in a Capacity to render thee that Satisfaction thou requirest, either in buying the Jewells, or in establishing any Correspondence. Those who inform'd thee of the Germans inhabiting that City, were mistaken in their Character, they being only a Society or Corporation of Students, and no ways concerned in Traffick or Merchandize.

They told thee right, in saying, There are a great Number of Strangers in Orleans. I think the Imperial City, which commands the World, cannot boast a greater Diversity of Languages, than are spoken daily in the Streets and Houses of Orleans. There are some, almost of all Nations, residing in that City.

Would'st thou know the real Occasion of this mighty Conflux of Foreigners. It is, That they may study that which the Nazarenes call the Civil Law, which is there professed as in an Academy, erected for that Purpose by Philip the Fair, one of the Kings of France.

If thou knowest not the Meaning of the Civil Law, it is, A Collection of the ancient Roman Laws, drawn from above Two thousand Books of their Scribes, by the Command of the Emperor Justinian, for a Standard of Equity in those corrupt Times, in that universal Relaxation and Decline of good Government.

This is the Attractive, which draws so many Strangers from all Parts of Europe, to that pleafant City, where, besides the Opportunity of improving themselves in the most honourable Profession among the Nazarenes, next to that of the Priessbood, they enjoy a pure and serene Heaven, a fruitful and delicious Part of the Earth, and the Company of the most obliging and courteous People in all France.

"Tis for this reason the Germans, among other Nations, slock to Orleans; and, through the Favour of the French Kings, have obtain'd a Privilege beyond other Nations; that is, To incorporate themselves into a Society of Students.' Neither is there any such thing as Merchandize known among them.

If I have not answer'd thy Expectation, supreme Prince of the Bassa's, blame not Mahmut, but accuse the Germans of Orleans, for not exchanging their Studies for Irassick; or rather blame those who presum'd to tell thee this far setch'd Fable. In sinishing this Letter, I bow my Head to the Floor of my Chamber, and kis the Paper which shall have the Honour to be touch'd by thy illustrious Hands.

: : : ! ! در !

Paris, 1st of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1647,

LET-

LETTER XVII.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

HOU hast heard of the Affyrian, Scythian, and Roman Heroines. These were all valiant Leaders of Armies, Women of Honour and Renown. Now I will inform thee of a Female which France has brought upon the Stage of War.

According to the Orders which I receiv'd from the Vizir Azem, I took a Journey to Orleans last Meen; where on the third Day after my Arrival, beholding a folemn Procession in the Streets of that populous City, attended with some uncommon Ceremonies and Rejoycings, my Curiofity prompted me to enquire the Occasion of it. Thou may'st imagine, I did not apply my self for Information to the Multitude, who take up Things on the common Credit of Fame, which does not always deliver the Truth. I address'd my self to those that were acquainted with the Records of the Town; who told me, That this Solemnity was yearly observ'd on the Eighth Day of the Fifth. Moon, in Memory of their wiverance from the English, who besieged this City, and were beaten from before it by Joan & Arc, a Maid of Lorrain, in the Reign of Charles I. This Virago feem'd to be the tutelar Angel of France: For to her Valour and Conduct, that Monarch ow'd the Recovery of this Kingdom, almost lost to the King of England; this being the last Place of Importance which had not receiv'd English Charrisons. After she had rais'd the Siege, she pursued the Enemy, gave them several Battels, defeated them, took the Generals Captive, reduced, all crities to their former Obedience, and never sheath'd her her Sword, 'till she saw her Masser solemnly crown'd at Rhemes. Yet at length she her self was made a Prisoner by the English, and was publickly burnt for a Witch at Rouen.

The Inhabitants of Orleans have erected brazen Statues in her Honour. They celebrate her Praifes, and esteem her a Woman divinely inspired to fave her Country. Yet the more intelligent fort fay, That she was neither Witch nor Prophetes, but only a Maid of good Wit and Courage, whom some of the Princes of the Blood Royal. had instructed to act the Part of a Missionary from Heaven; that so, by pretending Visions and Revelations, the might raise the Courage of the French now almost dispirited by their many Losses; and whom nothing less than a Miracle could perswade to abide the Field against the victorious English. This is certain, that she distinguish'd the King, though disguised like a Pealant, and in a Crow'd of People: She went boldly up to him, and faluted him by his Title. to the Aftonishment of those that stood by. She sent a Messenger to bring her a Sword of antique Workmanship, that lay hid in a Tomb in one of their famous Mosques; (for, the Nazarenes of the West bury the Dead in their Temples.) This Action extremely enhanced her Reputation, in regard none knew of this Sword but the King himself. She was therefore look'd upon as an extraordinary Person; and the People could hardly be restrain'd from paying her divine Honours.

When they were encamped on a certain Plain of a vast Extent, where there was no Water to be found, so that the Army was ready to perish through Thirst; the King came to the Tent of this Property, to consult her as an Oracle in the general Distress. She bad him be of good Courage.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris: 193

Courage, and follow her. They went out together to the Door of her Tent, where, at a little distance, there grew a Knot of Flowers. The admirable Maid struck her Spear into the Ground amidst the Flowers, and incontinently there sprung forth a Fountain of Water, to which the whole Army repaired to allay their Thirst. They say, the Place is shewn to this Day, with an Image of this Maid standing in an Oratory close by it; a Place of Refreshment and Devotion for Travellers that pass over those barren Plains.

However, whether it were Artifice, or that she was endued with some supernatural Gift, it had a marvellous Influence on the Soldiers, who began to re-assume Courage, and seared nothing under the Conduct of such a General.

'Twas Revenge without doubt, rather than Justice, that extorted that *ruel Sentence from the English, which put a Period to the heroick Actions of this illustrious Maid, whose Fame will live for ever.

It is recorded, That whilst she was bound fast to the Stake with strong Cords, they would have kindled the Fire upon her before she had spoke to the Spectators; but that she suddenly became loosen'd, and snatching a Lance from one of the Soldiers; she drove the Guards before her: Then returning of her own accord to the Stake, she made her last dying Speech, foretelling many Things to come, which afterwards proved true. And having made an end of speaking, she bid the Executioner set fire to the Wood; which he did accordingly, and she was burnt to Ashes.

Certainly every Nation may boast of some Female Warriour, that at one time or other has done remarkable Service to her Country.

And thou art not a Stranger to the History of K

Digitized by Google

the Anazon, who excluded Men from their Society, yet became formidable to all the Regions round about them.

Adieu, brave Commander of the Mussulman Forces, and let the Memory of these valiant Females inspire thee with fresh Ardours, when the Ottoman Empire is in Danger.

Paris, 1st of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXVIII.

To Dgnet Oglou.

HOU art the Man that must participate in all my Adventures. And I should be a Churl, in not letting thee share with me, the Pleafure I found in a late Journey to Orleans, one of the presidery Towns in France. It was by the Order of the Vizer Azem, I took that Jour-Some body had inform'd him, That this Town was full of Merchant-Travellers of several Nations, but especially of Germany, who brought the choicest Jewels of the East, to vend in this I'lace at ordinary Rates. That Minister gave me Commands to buy certain Stones, with Inftruations to treat of another Affair, which it is not necessary for thee to know. I accordingly fet out from Paris, the third Day of the fifth Moon; and Eliachim the Tew (of whom thou hast heard) bore me Company.

I need not describe to thee, the Country through which we pass'd: It exactly resembleth the Plains of S. Isidore, not far from Palermo in Sicily.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 195 Sicily. Thou and I have reason to remember that Place of our Captivity, carrying the Marks of our Master's cruel Anger yet in our Bodies. Those Plains, thou knowest, afford a very agreeable Prospect, especially at this time of the Year, when the Verdure of the Trees, mix'd with the Brightness of the Corn-fields, and the party-colour'd Meadows, tempt the Eye into a Controversy of Pleasure, a Man neither knowing well how to take it off, nor yet where to fix it, in such an orderly Confusion and Medley of charming Objects.

Such is the Province between Paris and Orleans, which has this Advantage of those Sicilian Plains. that here all the way one rides, innumerable magnificent and beautiful Palaces appear, shooting up their glittering Turrets above the lofty Groves, which environ those Seats & Pleasure. Indeed this is one of the purest Airs, and the most fertile Soil in all the Kingdom, which invites the Nobles and Gentry to refide here during the Summer, and occasions much travelling on this Road.

About Mid-day, we came to a Town called Chastres, where we alighted to refresh our selves. Travellers, in these Western Parts, are better accommodated with Provisions than they can be in Asa, where they must carry their own Beds with them, and dress their own Victuals, or lie on the naked Floor fasting. This makes the Nazarenes call the East inhospitable. They consider not at the fame time, that 'tis the Niceness and Delicacy of the Mahometans, which occasions this Custom. For the Eastern People are fearful of defiling themselves, by eating Meat prepared by other blands than their own, or those of their servants: As also to lie on a Bed, common to all Passengers.

Digitized by Google

But these Infidels are like the Swine, to whom all Meat is welcome, and every Ditch an acceptable Bed. Here are Inns all along the Roads, whereinto when you enter, the Hoff provides you both Bed, and all other Necessaries. A Man must venture to fleep on the fame Pillow, where perhaps a Leper has lain the Night before, or some Person infected with a worse Disease. The Hoff examines none, but harbours all alike, provided they have Money to pay him. And as for Victuals, 'tis the custom of all Travellers to eat topether at one common Table, where several Dishes of Meat are served up, and every Man is free to eat what and how much he pleases, paying a stated Price for his Dinner.

Thus no sooner were we come into our Inn at Chastres, but the Host saluting us after the Manner of the Country invited us to sit down at the Ordinary, (for so they call their publick Dinner in an Inn.) We were not so strupulous as to refuse his Offer, but follow'd him into the Chamber, where the Dinner was prepared. There were many Guests at the Table, and all busy in seeding themselves. We took such Seats as we found vacant, and without much Ceremony, sell to eating. The Jew trusted to the Indulgence of Moses, and I to that of Mahomet, for eating with the uncircumcised, whose Meat is seldom free from the Pollutions of Blood. We knew, that neither God, nor his Prophets, required us to starve.

There was Plenty of Wine, and that so delicious, as would have tempted an Hogia to taste it, without the Musti's Dispensation; to avoid Singularity, I made a Shew of eating as the rest; but the greatest part of my Repast consisted in Bread, and some Fruits, with that exhilarating Juice of the Grape.

dgilized by Google

The honest Jew swore 'twas a Banquet prepared by Cupid to render him the most miserable of all Men. For, just in the midst of our Mirth. came in a French Gentleman with a Lady in his Hand, who placed themselves at the Table exactly opposite to us. I perceived evident Symptoms of some Disorder in Eliachim, who seem'd to read his Fate in that fair Creature's Face; yet had not Power to check his wand'ring Eyes, or guard them from inevitable Wounds. H'd almost acted o'er the Story of the Egyptian Wives, whom Joseph's Mistress had invited to behold his Beauty; they cut their Fingers for their Meat, whilst gazing on the charming Youth: So poor Eliachim was all Confusion, turn'd to a Statue, whilst he look'd on this enchanting Gorgon. He had forgot to eat or drink, till I began to rouze him from his Dream. I told him foftly in the Ear, This Lady was but the younger Sister of Ixion's Mistress. This brought him to his Sense again, but could not restore his Peace. Prudence taught him to diffemble the violent Emotion of his Soul, and not to expose himself in such a Company; but nothing could expel the fatal Poifon from his Breaft.

When we had sufficiently reposed our selves, we bid adieu to the Inn, all joining Company, and setting forward to Orleans. On the Road both Eliachim and I had many Opportunities of conversing with this young Lady; such Familiarity with Women, being allowed in France. We found her Wit surprizing as her Beauty; and her Mien and Conduct; such as gave Advantage to them both. In a Word, Eliachim was lost amidst fo many Perfections.

When we came to our Inn at Night, and were in our Chamber together, he vented his Passion in these Words: Mahmut, I have pass'd these Years K 3 bitherte bitberto, without any other Sentiments of Love, fave thoje which in general I owe to all our Race, and some more particular Regard of Friendsbip and Duty. But, fince I faw this lovely Creature, methinks my Friends, and all that ought to be beloved on Earth, is now contracted into ber. 'Tis not ber snowy Skin or matchless Features, are of Force to move me; though they are such, thy self being Judge, as would have foiled Apelle's Art to imitate; But'tis a Luftre which I can't express! Surely 'twas Lightning darted from her Eyes, these fair Avenues of ber brighter Soul! The subtile Flame glanced through my Breaft, and in a Moment scorch'd my Reason up! The lovely Bafilifk foot Death at every Look! Thou fawest bow I sate as one transformed; so lifeless, and without Motion was I, whilf gazing on my Ruin! And to this Hour a fatal Numbness spreads through all my Veins, as if I had touch'd some dire Torpedo.

Thus went he raving on, till I interrupted him with Laughter and Railery, endeavouring to cure him of his Love-sick Humour by ridiculing it. I told him my own Experience of this foolish Pafica, rehearsed my former Adventures with Daria, and how at length I got the Victory of this vain Fondness by Absence, and the Exercise of my Reason. But all that I could say, made no Impression on the stupid Lover. He grew but worse, and so I lest him to seek Repose from sleep.

We came not to Orleans, till the next Day, where we tarried not long, having no other Business as it happen'd, but to see the Rarities of the Town, and inform our selves of those things it is convenient for Travellers to know. After which we return'd to Paris: I with the same Sentiments I had at my first setting out from thences but it seems the World was metamorphosed in poor Eliashim's Opinion. To him him the Trees had now loft all their Greenness; the Flowers, and Grass, and Corn, look'd wither'd; the Birds sung mournful Notes; the Winds blew hoarse, unwelcome Sounds; and every thing in Nature seem'd to him to droop, because Falante was not there (so was the fair one call'd, as Eliachim had learn'd of her,) when we parted from Orleans.

In this melancholy Condition, the poor Brainfick Jew has continued ever fince. When his Cure will commence, I know not.

If thou yet retainest thy native Liberty, and hast not sacrificed it to unhappy Love, learn by his Missortune to watch thy Senses, which are the first Traytors to the Soul. Adieu.

Paris, 1st of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XXIX.

To the Captain Bassa.

HOU that hast had thy Education in Arfenals, and hast led the rest of thy Life in Ships of War, wilt be best able to judge of the Proposal, which a certain bloody Sea Captain made to Cardinal Mazarini not long ago.

It being the general Discourse of this City, with what Insult and Desiance Admiral Marosini, with about thirty Men of War, enter'd the Hellerspont, and braved the Dardanels: This Officer told the Cardinal, That if he would furnish him with half that Number of Ships, he would engage to drive the Sultan out of his Seraglio, lay that Palace in the Dask, and beat down the Towers of K. 4.

all the Mosques in Constantinople, or lose his Life in the Attempt. To which the Cardinal replied, Monsieur, I believe 'tis impossible, if you could sains your Work, before they would board your Men of War with a Hundred Gallies and Saiques full of armed Men.

It is said, That Cardinal Richlieu had such a Project once, which made him propose the Building of prodigious high Ships, whose Out-sides should be stuck all over with sharp Spikes, that should render it impossible for Gallies to board them.

By this thou may'st know, that such an Attempt is not thought impracticable by the Christians. I wish it be not put in effectual Execution by them, when the Port may least dream of it.

Christina, Queen of Swedeland, has caused a most magnificent Vessel to be built, with design to p, esent it to Cardinal Mazarini. The inner Work of the Cabin is of Cedar, curiously overlaid with Flowers, and other Imagery of Gold. tremity of the Stern, adorn'd with Windows, Statues and Galleries; the wooden Work all overlaid with the same Metal. The Roof of the Cabin presents the Story of Jason's Expedition to get the Golden Fleece, painted by the best Masters in Swedeland. All the Furniture speaks the Royal Bounty of her that gives it. The Cannon are of the purest Brass. The rest of the Tackle such as are fittest to weather the Winds and Waves; from which neither this Queen's Sovereignty in Swedeland, nor the Cardinal's Grandeur in France, could exempt either of them, were they exposed to Sca.

There are those who whisper on this Occasion, That the Queen of Swedeland has some Inclinations to the Roman Catholick Religion; that she has had several Conferences with Mansseur Chanus, on that that Subject, as also with his Priests; that her Resident in Pertugal has openly embrac'd that Faith, not without the Queen's private Consent and Approbation. It is not material to us, what 'Religion the Insidels profess, whill they affert Docurring, repugnant to the Divine Unity, and the Truth of the Sent of God. I behold, at this time, an evident Sign of his Unity in the Heavens; it is the New Moon, just rising from the lower Hemisphere. At the Sight of this Planet, the Messenger of God, has commanded me to fall on my Pace, and adore the Eternal.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 201

Wherefore praying, That her Influences may prove propitious to thee, whilst thou art on the Ocean, I bid thee adieur.

-1-

Paris, 23d of the 6th-Moon, of the Year 1647.

The End of the Second Book.

and the condition of the second of the secon

bra appri vi K 5

LETTERS

Writ by

A Spy at Par

VOL. III.

BOOK IIL

LETTER I.

To Bedredin, Superior of the Convent of Dervises, at Cogni in Natolia.

OT more welcome are the rich Perfumes of Arabia, to a Soul almost expiring through Grief and Melancholy, than is thy Letter to Mabmut, wherein is contain'd the Certificate of thy being yet on this Side the State of Invinfibles. Methinks all Nature flourishes, while thou art alive. feel a Spirit within me, prompts me to presage, That thy Death, like the fall of Leaves in Autumn, will prove the Harbinger of the World's last Winter. Whilst thou livest, thy Prayers and Merits support the drooping Elements, which are now almost ready to fall into their primitive Chass and Inactivity. The Angel of the Trumbet. in Contemplation of thy Virtue, delaysto found the grand tremendant Blaft; which, at an Instant, shall puff out the Light of the Sun, Moon and Stars, and blow the Breath out of the Norrils of all the living Generations. That Day shall be a Day of Darkness, Horror and Silence, 'till the Hour of Transmigration comes: When at the fecond Blaft the Firmament shall rend afunder, like the opening of Curtains; this old World shall fly away like a Shadow, to the Right Hand and to the Left. Then shall maked Souls hang hovering in the empty Space, twixt Paradise and Hell. The Throne shall be placed, Judgmens shall be given: And, to wind up the Mysteries of Fate, a new and immortal World shall at a Moment spring forth from the Womb of Eternity, and possess the Place of the former.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 203

I write not this to instruct thee, Venerable Be-dredin, who art a Mine of Knowledge: But to satisfy thee, that tho' I live amongst Instidels, yet I conserve inviolate the Faith of my Fathers, believing the Book brought down from the eternal Archives. Thou fearest that I shall turn Christian, being accused by some, of Levity in my Opinions; by others of Prophaneness and Atheism; by all, of discovering too savourable an Inclination to the Nazarenes.

Suffer me, O body President of the Servants of God, to purge my self of these sale Imputations the Product of Envy and Malice. Permit me to lay at thy facred Fest, a madest Apology for my Faith.

Let not that Description of the Christians Messas, which I sent thee in my last Letter, create in thee an Opinion to my Disadvantage; nor prevail on thee to think, I can ever swerve from the profound Attach, I owe to the Sent of God. honour Yesus, the Son of Mary; and so I do all his Brethren, the Prophets in Paradise: This I am taught in the Alcoran. Where is then my Crime? If I give Virtue its due Praise, even in the Infidels, am I therefore a Nazarene? If I speak with Reverence and Modesty of Christian Princes, am not I therefore a Mussulman? Or, does the Book of Glory teach us Arrogance? Surely my Traducers will blush, when they shall consider, that our august Emperors themselves, (who are Sovereigns of all the Kings on Earth,) when they vouchsafe to write to Christian Princes, dictate their Letters in a Style, full of Affection and Regard. They give them magnificent Titles at the Beginning; and at the Conclusion, they wish them Encrease of Felicity, both bere, and in Pasadile. And would it become a Slave, to treat erown'd Heads with less Respect, than does the Master of the Universe? If I have contracted Friendship with some of the Christian Dervises, it was to serve the Ends of the subtime Port, and perform the Rites of Gratitude. I thought it no Crime, to receive a Kindness from any Man, or to return it, without examining his Religion. But perhaps they suspect the Intimacies I had with Cardinal Richlien, and still have with his Succeffor Mukarini... Rest affared, O holy Dervise, that my Accels to these Princes of the Roman Churrh, is fo far from being criminal, that without it I never had been capable of penetrating into the Counsels of the Infidels, or of doing any effectual Service to the Grand Signior. The Countenance which my Familiarity with these two great Ministers affords me, has all along facilitated my Deligns: And, whilk under their Umbrage, I am taken for a zealous Christian : I fe-

I fecretly lay a Foundation, whereon in due time, shall be built, even in the Heart of Chriflendom, triumphal Arches, for the victorious Mussulmans. Tis strange, methinks, that after all this, I should be suspected! That notwithflanding I-have patiently endured nine Years Confinement, to an obscure and private Life; a melancholy Banishment to a strange Country: yea, to a City for which I have a natural Averfion; a City the most unclean, noisy and vain in the whole Earth; to be shut up, for the sake of avoiding Discovery, in a Chamber so narrow, that Suspicion it self, nay even Thought, the Mother of that little Passion, would sweat and be stifled. when once circumscribed within these Walls; and after all this, to be made a Prisoner of State, on Jealoufy of being a Mahometan: To abide that Punishment so many Moons unmov'd, uncorrupted, and at length to be released, to the Advantage of the Ottoman Interest, and yet to be traduced at home, for a Traytor to God, his Prophet, and my Sovereign, has furely fomething in it inconfistent.

What is then my Crime? Or, why am I thus aspers'd? Let my Slanderers hereafter be sitlent. Unless they will lay it to my Charge, That in some of my Letters I have discovered a Mind free from Superstition; That I put a high Value on Reason, and have no low Esteem for some of the ancient 'Philosophers; that I endeayour to guard my Sense, and will not suffer it to be muzzled with the Impositions of Ignorance and Prejudice; that I do not think it a necessary . Qualification of a Muffulman, to purfue with inexorable Hatred, tall Men that differ from me in Opinion: In line, That in all my Conversation, I floive to comport my felf as one who afforts the Unity of the Divine Effence, the ت ندراء Plurality Plurality of his Prophets, the determinate Number of the Elect; and who is resolved and prepared, rather to die a Thousand Deaths, than voluntarily to commit an Impiety against these Principles, or the Interest of the Grand Signiar, who has a Right to command all Mankind. If these be Crimes, I must own my self-culpable: If not, fer my Accusers lay their Hand upon their Mouth. And continue thou, sage Dossor of our boly Law, to instruct me with thy Counsels, to assist me with thy Prayers, and to protect me with thy Friendship. Then shall Mahmut persevere a true Believer, a faithful Slaves to the Osman Emperor, and a devout Admirer of thy Longevity and Virtue.

I should fear this might be the last Letter I should have the Honour to send thee, were I not convinced by some near Examples, that old Age was not reftrain'd to the Times before the Flood. Though thou hast far out-pass'd the ordinary Years of Men, yet there is at this time, not far from Paris, a Man who has near doubled thy Age. He is an Hermit, living on a Hill. where all things necessary for Human Sustenance feem to be wanting. The Walls of his House are built of Mud, with his own Hands, (a weak Defence against Wind and Rains.) His Bed is composed of Leaves of Trees. A Stone serves. him for his Pillow. His Diet confifts of such Herbs and Fruits, as that Mountain affords him. A neighbouring Well allays his Thirst. He has dwelt in this Place, and in this manner Eighty three Years, after he had travelled most Parts of Europe and Afia. Ask him by what Means he preferved his Life so long, he answers, By living free from Care, and by being indifferent to all Things. He foretels Things to come with marvellous Success, as has often been observ'd; which which makes the People esteem him a Propbet.

The French tell me of another who lived longer than he, being Three hundred fixty and one Years old when he died. He was call'd, John of the Times, in regard he liv'd from the Reign of Charles the Great, to that of the Emperor Conrade. And being afk'd what Diet he used, his Answer was, Haney within, and Oil without.

This comforts me with the Hopes of feeing thee on Earth, tho' many Years hence: Since no Man can exceed thee in Abstinence, Sobriety, and the Calmness of thy Mind.

The great Author of Life so grant, That if I may not enjoy this Felicity here, yet I may not, by any enormous Crimes, merit to be excluded thy Society in Paradise.

Paris, 11th of the 7th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER II. To Murat Bassa.

HE French are puffed up with the late Defeat they gave the Spanish Fleet in Sight of Naples. Their Joy would know no Bounds, were it not curb'd by the Loss of the Duke of Brezen who was flain by a Canon Bullet in this naval Combat.

The young Prince of Conde has been also forced to withdraw his Army from before Letida, that Place being ever fatal to the French. This has lessen'd the Disgrace which the Count of Harcourt received the last Campaign, in not being being able to carry that Town, after fix Moons

Siege.

But the News from the Levant has elated all the Franks beyond Measure: Yet, I hope, the Relations that are scatter'd abroad on that Subject, are rather an Effect of their Wishes, than of any real Success against the invincible Ofmans.

It is reported, That there have been two Sea Fights between our Fleets and the Venetians; that in the former, we lost two thousand Men, seven Galleys, and a Bassa; that in the latter, the Venetians took forty Gallies, fix Caramusals, and fifty Saigues, laden with Men and Ammunition for the Relief of our Army in Candy.

The Honour of this last Victory, is ascribed to the Valour and Conduct of Bernard Morosini, and General Grimani; Bernard succeeded his Brother Thomas Morosini, who was kill'd, as they say, in the first Battel.

The Christians every where express great Joy for these Victories. The open Streets are fill'd with Tables, cover'd, with all manner of Dainties, at the publick Cost. They feast and revel Night and Day. The Bells ring continually, and Bonsires are made, to celebrate the Triumph of the Nazarenes. They presage to themselves, the Conquest of the Ottoman Empire, and evernal Victories.

From Dalmatia, the Posts bring daily News of our Losses and Disgraces. It is known here, That the Castles of Xemonials, Novigrads, Nagin, Carin, and all the Places of Strength which we had in our Possession, except Clissa, are taken by the Venetians.

They laugh at our Siege of Sebenico, where we loth two thousand Men, and at length wete fore'd to leave our Camp to the Christiani, our General boing trighted away by a few Women.

It

It seems strange and ominous to me, That those Arms which have formerly crush'd the greatest Monarchies to pieces, and have changed the Face of the whole Earth, should now be foil'd by a sew Desparado's! I dare be thus far a Prophet, that either the Soldiers are disgusted, which will produce a Revolution, or the mighty Empire of the Osmans is in its Decline, which God avert.

The Christians, (who are not ignorant of our Affairs, nor of the very Secrets of the Seraglio) by an odd Kind of Charity, pray for the long Life of Sultan Ibrabim: For, they fay, our Armies must needs miscarry during his Reign; most of the Officers, being offended at his licentious Life, and cruel Actions. Besides, they tax him with Profuseness, in that he has not spared the private Treasury of Gold, which by the Frugality of his Predecessors, had been heaped together; and which it was not counted lawful for them to touch, unless in the utmost Peril of the Empire. They fay, That by the Additions which Sultan Amurat had made, this Treasure was augmented to above Thirty Millions of Sequins: But that our present Emperor has squander'd most of it away on his Pleasure. They compare him to Heliogabalus, the most effeminate Prince that ever reign'd; praifing, at the same time, the Magnanimity and Valour of Sultan Amurat; who, they fay, was the stoutest Man on Earth. They highly applaud his Bravery at the Siege of Babylon, when he accepted the Challenge of the Perfian Soldier; and entring into a fingle Combat with the unhappy Redbead, at one Blow, with his Sabre, cleft him (though in Armour) to the middle. In Memorial whereof, thou knowest, that Armour hangs to this Day in the Hazeda. In fine, they extol his Justice: Whereof he gave a remarkable Instance, in punishing a certain Hogia, who had cheated a Pilgrim of his Jewels: Thou remembreft that Passage. And the Stone Mortar, wherein that miserable Wretch was pounded alive by his own Sentence, is yet to be seen at the Gate of the Divan, a Monument of his Villany, and the Sultan's Justice.

These Things are not unknown in the West; for the Nazarenes have their Intelligences in the Imperial City. Hence they derive Occasions to censure of praise the Actions of our august Emperers, who are Companions of the Sun, and Brothers of the Stars.

What I have faid, I trust to thy Integrity: Whereof I have had Experience. Those who degenerate from that Virtue, may their Souls find no more Rest in the other World than a Frenth-Man's Hat has in this, which is always in Motion. Adieu.

Paris, 15th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER III.

To Mahomet Techli, Bassa of Bosnia, at his Camp in Dalmatia.

Armies, who durst not hold up thy Head against a few Women: Perhaps thy Mother's Milk hangs yet on thy Chin; thou art not wean'd from the Discipline of the Nursery. Was the strong Fortress of Schenico of so small a Price, that thou shouldst basely decamp from before it, because a few Females appear'd on the Walls? Is this the way to aggrandize thy Master? What will the Cbristians say to this Cowardice? Nay, what do they not say already? The News of that Siege had reach'd all Parts of Europe; the Nazarenes were big with Expectation of the Event. Now they know it, they laugh both at thee, and at all the Mussulmans. Thou hast brought a Disgrace on the most exalted Empire in the World.

Digitized by Google

What if thou didst lose Two thousand Men before the Walls of that Fort? Is that a sufficient Justification of thy raising the Siege? Our glorious Sultans do not use to win Cities and Castles without Blood? Neither do they spare to sacrifice the best part of their Army to the Honour of their Arms, whilst our indefatigable Soldiers have mounted on Heaps of flaughter'd Spabi's, and scaled the Battlements of their Enemies. Whereas thou wert afraid of a few Stones, that the Women hurl'd on thy Men from the Walls: Thou art more efferminate than Sardanapalus! It were fitter for thee to handle the Distass and spin for thy Bread, than to draw a Sword in the Field of Honour. It is a Wonder thy own Soldiers do not abandon thee, being asham'd to serve under so weak a Commander.

I counsel thee, speedily to recover thy lost Reputation, by some notable Service. Let not Perils affright thee; but remember, That true Fortitude surmounts all Difficulties; and that thou can'ft not pass into the Temple of Honour, but through that of Firtue. It is not my part to project for thee: The whole Country is before thee; Thou knowest, or at least oughtest to know, the Motions and Strength of thy Enemies. Do something speedily, that shall speak thee wise and valiant. Thou hadst better lose thy Life so, than by a Bow-String.

Take .

Take this Advice as a Mark of my Friendship, for Mahmut uses not so frankly to reprove those whom he esteems his Enemies. Adieu.

Paris, 15th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER IV. To Achmet Bassa.

OT long ago arrived here a Courier from Swedeland, bringing Letters from Queen Christina and Monsieur Chanut, the French Resident at Stockholm.

Among other Matters, they give an Account, That on the twenty feventh Day of the seventh Moon, that great Princess had like to have been stab'd in the midst of her Guards, surrounded with her Courtiers, before the Altar of her God; at an Hoar when all the Subjects of that Kingdom were on their Knees, to render Heaven propitious to ber and the publick.

That Day there was a Fast proclaim'd through all Sevedeland; and he was esteem'd no good Subject, who did not repair to the publick Solemnities. The Queen, to give an Example, went at the third Hour of the Day to the Mosque of her Palace, attended by the great Officers of State, and a numerous Train of the Nobility. When the Preacher (as is the Custom) had made an end of speaking, all that were present fell on their Knees, to perform the appointed Devotions. But it being the Fashion of the Nazarenes to utter some secret preparative Oraisons, the Men cover'd their Faces with their Hats, to be more recollected.

While

While all Eyes were thus veil'd, a certain Fellow fnatching the Opportunity, steps from his Place, and, without making any great Noise, by large Strides, advances unseen to the Rails which enclose the Pavement next to the Altar, where the Queen was on her Knees. But in leaping over, he was perceived by a certain Nobleman, who immediately cry'd out to the Guards, to flop the Affaffin. They cross'd their Partisans, but the Villain hurl'd them one against another with so great Violence, that while they were striving to recover their entangled Weapons, he got quite through them. At which time, the Queen also raising her self up at the Noise, push'd the Captain of her Guards, who kneeled beside her. He starting from his Place, leap'd between the Queen and the Murderer, who was now within two Paces of her. He seizes the Wretch; and, upon immediate Search, they found two long sharp-pointed Knives about him, without Sheaths; one in his Bosom, the other in The Prison being in the Castle or his Pocket. Palace of the Queen, under her very Apartment, the was not willing he shou'd be carried thither, but order'd him to be re-conducted to his own Chamber, which was in the College of Stockholm, he being an Ecclesiastick of the said College; commanding also a good Guard to be set over him, which was perform'd accordingly.

As soon as the Wretch saw himself in his Chamber, he said aloud, That when he went out in the Morning, he little thought of ever returning again, having undertaken an Astion, in doing of which be expected to lese bis Life.

They used all Diligence imaginable in discovering the Authors of this intended Murder; but could learn nothing more, Than that this Fellow was a Lunatick, whom at certain Seasons an unaccountable Fury spurred on to many Extravagancies.

Yet

Yet fome suspect, that he was hired by the Lutheran Clergy to give this execrable Blow; who were apprehensive, That the Queen heark'ning too much to the Infinuations of her Tutor, who was a Calvinit, would innovate the establish'd Religion of the Country.

If this be a well-grounded Suspicion, it follows at the best, that Religion which ought to correct the Morals of Men, and have an Influence in restraining their exorbitant Passions, is become the Corrupter of their Manners, and the Fomenter of the most enormous Crimes. But this is common among the Christians, who being divided into innumerable Parties, distinguish'd by as many several Names; yet each Sect is so sure that their Way is the only right Path to Salvation, that they spare for neither Murders, Sacrileges, nor Treasons, to proselyte the rest to their Opinion, being unwilling that any should live, who are not of the same Mind with them.

The King of France, and the Queen Regent, receiv'd the News of Queen Christina's Delivery from this design'd Blow with much Joy; the Interests of both Crowns being at this time closely intermingled.

I can inform thee of nothing more remarkable at present, save, that certain Letters are intercepted, which the Duke of Bavaria had written to the Duke of Wirtemberg, and the Elector of Cologne: The Contents of which discover, That the Duke of Bavaria is not far from a Reconciliation with the Emperor; and that, in the mean time, he only waits the Event of Things, to direct him in the Choice of his Party.

God confirm thee in thy Integrity, That thou may'st never waver or swerve from the Service and Duty thou owest the Grand Signier.

Paris, 28th of the 9th Moon,

of the Year 1647.

E E T-

Digitized by Google

LETTER V.

To Cara Hali, a Physician at Constantinople.

HOU hast heap'd many Favours on me; yet I have never had an Opportunity of making the least Acknowledgment. Accept now a small Present from Mahmut's Hands, who being not Master of Wealth, can make no great ones. send thee neither. Silver, Gold, nor Jewels, which the infatiable Avarice of Mortals, has violently torn from the Bowels of their common Mother. Neither shalt thou receive from me any of the more familiar Products of the Earth, such as grow on her Surface. Expect no choice Fruits, or Wine, or Oil; nor any thing framed by the Art of Man, whether for Delight, or Use. What I fend thee is the Dew of Heaven, a certain Quintessence of the Element, an Æthereal Spirit, first condens'd into a Vapour, then into a more liquid Substance, and afterwards congealed into a Gum. It is the celebrated Manna of Calabria.

Adonai the Jew fent it to me out of Italy as a Rarity. I knew not whom so properly to oblige with this present, as the Studious of natural Things, Hali the sage Physician, and my Briend.

The Philosopher Averroes, our Country man, has written much of this excellent Substance. He dails it, The Pood of the Airy Angels; and says, The young Ravens crying in their Nests, are nourish'd by this heavenly Diet, when the old ones sorfake them: And that the Chamelions seek no other Repast during their Lives, but the invisible Manna, that every where floats in the Morning

Digitized by Google

ing Air. He holds it possible, That a Man, after he has pass'd his great Climatter, may live without any other Sustenance save what he receives from this Heavenly Distillation; that he may thus prolong his Life for the Space of seven Years, which will complete the appointed Age of Mortals. Many of the fublimely instructed among the Arabians, are of the same Opinion; so are not a few of the Hebrew Rabbi's, but the Christians, who are Gluttons, laugh at this Doctrine as ridiculous and impracticable, forgetting at the same time what they read in their Bible, (which they pretend is the Rule of their Faith) that the Israelites had nothing else to feed on for a considerable Time in the Defart, when they were almost Eight hundred thousand Souls, and the greatest part of them in their full Strength, Men of Arms, and inur'd to the Toils of War.

Certainly it were a defirable Thing, That this divine Larges were distributed to all the Regions on Earth. But God sends his Blessings to whom, and when he pleases. 'Tis he that directeth the Clouds when they move through the Air, and rest not till they arrive at barren and dry Places, where they pour forth their Water to refresh the Earth, and render it fruitful. God! There is but one God, Lord of the World! These are Signs of his Unity to true Bolievers, but the incredulous have harden'd their Hearts.

It is recorded, That in former Times, the Ground whereon this Manna descended, belong'd to a certain Nobleman of the Countrey, who covetous of the unusual Blessing, undertook to enclose all that Land within a high Wall, to the end that so rare a Gift might not be made common to every one. But, as soon as the Workmen had begun to lay the Foundation of this Enclosure, the Manna ceas'd to fall, and so continued, as long as they they proceeded in that envious Work. Which when the Lord of the Ground was made fensible of, he commanded the Workmen to desist, saying withal, The Almighty gives, and the Almighty takes away. Henceforward, I will not seek to restrain the free Gift of Heaven. Upon which, the Manna descended daily, as before, and so has continued to do ever since. Doubtless, this is a Sign of God's Omnipotence.

Wol. III. a Spy at Paris. 217

If thou wilt permit me to play the Philosopher, I will tell thee my Opinion, why this Manna is feen rather in the Kingdom of Naples, than in any other Region of the Earth.

It is well known, That the Earth of this Country abounds with Veins of Sulphur, which are diffused up and down through all Parts, and heat the Soil to an extraordinary Degree. Hence it follows, That the lower Region of the Air, in this Country, must need acquire a greater Degree of Heat and Driness also, being perpetually rarified by the siery Atoms, which every where transpire through the Pores of the Earth, as from a Furnace.

This being so, it is not hard to conceive, That the Vapours which are exhaled by the Sun into the upper Region, in the Heat of a Summer's Day, and there become impregnated by the Æthereal Spirit, (which remains pure and un-. cloath'd in those serener Tracts, and consequently, is apt to incorporate with any proper Vehicle,) naturally descend again in the Cool of the Night; but not meeting with a congeneous Body of Vapours in the lower Region, that Air being over-purify'd, and grown defecate, through the too near Neighbourhood of the burning Soil; so that they cannot diffuse themselves thro' the Air, for the want of a fit Medium, they confisting of bemogeneous Parts, and following the

the natural Position of the Element, and the Laws of Gravity; contract themselves into little globular Forms, the lower they descend; thus settling on the Leaves of Trees, on the Grass and Herbs, on Stones, and any part of the Earth, appearing like Grains of transparent Gum.

Hence also I conceive, That the same Manna, (which is nothing else but an Æthereal Spirit, embodied in light and dulcied Vapours) abounds in the Air of most Countries, but remains invisible. rarely so far condensed, as to settle in a gross Body on the Ground, because the Air of those Regions is not so rarified as is that of Calabria, having no such subterranean Fires to drink the Vapours up; but being moist and thick, the descending Manna, instead of contracting it felf into globular Bodies, and through its Weight finking to the Earth, dilates itself, and incorporates with the floating Vapours: Just as if you pour Drops of Water into a Vessel full of the same Element, those Props do not fink to the Bottom, but finding an bomogeneous Body, they mix with it, and are dispersed every way; whereas, if there be nothing in the way to stop them, they immediately fall to the Ground.

But I shall tire thee with my Philosophy, forgetting that I speak to a Man consummate in all Sciences. Adonai relates many remarkable Passages of this Country, too tedicus for a Letter. I will only tell thee in short, That the Kingdomsof Naples is esteemed one of the most delectable Regions on Earth, the Trees slourishing twice a Year, and the Soil abounding to Prodigality with Corn, Wine, Oil and Fruits, and all things necessary for the Life of Man. Yet the Inhabitants have this Proverb common among them; The Kingdom of Naples is a Paradise of Delights, but it is inhabited with Dewils: So corrupted are the Manners of the People.

Adieu, 🔸

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 219

Adieu, dear Hali, and think not Mahmut tedious in his Letters, who has no other Way, at this Distance, to converse with his Friends.

Paris, 19th of the 10th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER VI.

To Kerker Haffan Baffa.

HEN this Differth shall come to thy Hands, be affured, That Mahmut thy Country-man, and Slave to the Slaves of the Grand Signier, wishes thee Multiplicity of Happiness. I have many Reasons to honour thee, besides the natural Affection, which is, or ought to be, between those who were born in the same Region. The many Favours thou hast done me, far exceeded the Obligation which arises from the Vicinity of our Birth; though that was so near, that a strong Man would have measured the Distance with one Flight of an Arrow.

The Present of Kopba, for which I return'd thee Thanks in my last, has wrought wonderful Effects on me, being a perfect Cure of the Melancholy, to which I was before subject. It has freed me from many Distempers; and I owe the present Ease and Cheerfulness I enjoy, to this generous Gift.

Methinks, while I am drinking this excellent Liquor, I am at Constantinople, conversing with my Friends. It revives in me the Genius of Asia; and so advantageously transforms the Ideas of Things which I see, that the Crosses on the Tops of the Christian Temples, appear to me as Half-Moons; and my Imagination presents to me Turbants, instead of Hats, as Men walk along the Streets of Paris.

Digitized by Google

Doubtless, great is the Force of what we eat . or drink, which has occasion'd all wife Law-givers, among other Sanctions, to prescribe certain Rules of Diet: and the Care of our boly Prophet has been exquisite in this Point, his Prohibitions extending to all unclean Meats and Drinks, fince they deprave the Constitutions of Men, and encline them to Vice. But, by his own Example, he recommended to us the Use of this admirable Berry; imposing a new Name on the Tree that bears it, when he called it, the Tree of Purification. Hence it is, That all the Mussulmans affect to partake of the fanctified Benefit, it being the universal Beverage of the O/man Empire. Were the Virtues of it known in these Western Parts, it would match, if not supplant, the Credit of their Wines, fince it equally refreshes the Spirits, without intoxicating the Brain.

I know not whether thou hast seen Pesteli-bali, my Brother, since thy Return from Arabia: Or, whether thou hast heard the News he brought with him out of the East. He has survey'd the Indies, Tartary, China, Tonquin, Persia, and other Regions, whose Names are hardly known in some Parts of the Otteman Empire. Indeed, we have formerly had but an odd Idea of those remote Countries; but especially China has been hid from the greatest Part of the Earth.

In my earlier Years, I have heard Men of Gravity, who would be taken for knowing Persons, say, That China was but a tributary Province of the Tartars, a contemptible Corner of Asia, and so barren, as it could hardly afford Sustemance for its Inhabitants, which is a Sign it is well Peopled.

Peopled. Affuredly our Fathers were ignorant of this Country, which after the perpetual Monarchy, of the Ofmans, may be esteem'd the fecond Empire on Earth.

My Brother says, It contains Sixteen Provinces, each as large as a Kingdom: And, That all together they fill up a Tract of Ground as big as Europe, which, thou knowest, is one of the Four Quarters of the World: And that this vast Dominion contains above a Hundred Millions of Inhabitants.

The Emperor who reign'd when Pesteli-bali was there, was call'd Zunchin, a young Prince, not above thirty Years of Age; in whose Veins ran the Blood of Sixteen Emperors, his Progenitors.

In the Year 1640, two great Officers in his Army, having drawn to their Party an innumerable Company of the Soldiers, and being incouraged by some Grandees at the Court, made a Revolt. The Names of these Rebels were Lycungz and Changien. They soon became Masters of Five Provinces: But, quarrelling about their Shares, Lycungz caused his Affociate to be possion'd; and taking on himself the sole Command of the Rebels, was proclaim'd by them, Emperor of China. After which, he march'd directly with his whole Forces against Pequin, a City where the Emperor kept his Court: Knowing that the Conquest of this Place would secure to him all the remaining Provinces of the Empire.

The Chinese are reputed a most ingenious People, excelling in all manner of mechanick Inventions, and the boldest Architests in the World. They build Bridges from one Mountain to another, to shorten the Traveller's Journey o'er the Plain between them, and raise Towers almost up to the Clouds. Some of their Cities are faid to be near Thirty Leagues in Compass, having ing double Walls and Ditches. And, my Brother fays, That Pequin wants not much of this Extent: And, That the Palace of the Emperor is near a League in Circuit, inviron'd by three Walls, and as many Moats, besides Bulwarks, and other Fortistications. He adds, That this mighty City and Palace, is guarded by an hundred thougand Soldiers.

This impregnable Place the Rebels took by Stratagem, which was able to have refifted all the Force of Afia. Lycungz held a private Correspondence with several Grandees within the Town and Palace. By whose Connivance he sent great Numbers of the stouest Men in his Army, disguisted in the Habit of Merchants, who lodging themselves in divers Quarters of the City, on a Day appointed, suddenly appeared in Arms; and surprizing the Guards who desended the Gates, slew them all, and open'd the Gates to the Rebels.

Who can express the Consusion and Slaughter that filled all Parts of the City with Mourning and Blood? The barbarous Conqueror sacrificed all the Loyal and Brave to his unpardonable Ambition; disarm'd those who escaped the first Massacre; and having made himself absolute Master of the City, lays a close Siege to the Imperial Palue.

The Emperor now finding that he was betray'd, and that it was too late to defend himself from the cruel Persecution and Insult of the Traytors, takes Advantage of the short Resistance which some of his faithful Servants made, to consult his own Honour, with that of the Empress and his Daughter. He had above Three thousand Wives, for whom he could not provide in that Flood of Calamities, all his Care being employ'd to prevent the last Triumph of his Enemies.

Enemies, in not suffering the Royal Blood to be shed by the prophane Hands of these Villains. He enter'd into the Gardens of the Palace, accompanied only by his Empress and Daughter, with three faithful Eunuchs. The young Princess, (who was a Lady educated in all the Chinese Learning) seeing the great Affliction of her Royal Parents, the inevitable Ruine of her Family and the universal Desolation, sell on her Knees, and spoke to her Father, as follows:

My Lord, "CINCE it is the Will of the immortal Gods, " I thus to extinguish the Lustre and Majesty " of our fublime Race, let their Decrees be fulfill'd. "But let not me be a Spectator of my Parents " Fall, or survive a Tragedy, at which the Earth it " self must tremble. Have this Compassion on " my tender Years, and let these Eyes be closed, " before Death feal up yours, from which mine " borrow'd all their Light. Think not, because "I am young, I fear to die: I long to fee our " Kindred Gods, and represent the Fate of China, " fo as to provoke their speedy Vengeance. Sure-" ly our defiled Ancestors, at my Complaint, would " gather all the Thunder in the Heavens, and " shower it down upon these perjur'd and ungrate-" ful Traytors. Or else, they'd play the Chymists, " and extract the most envenom'd Influence of the " Stars, and dart the beavenly Poison on the Re-" bels, as they lie before these sacred Walls, and " thus would put a Period to their cursed Treason. " Make no Delay, my Royal Father, but try the " Experiment; release me from these Chains, " which hinder my Escape to Paradise: And let " me be the Herald of such News; as ne'er before " furpriz'd the Bless'd above.

The Emperor, mov'd with this passionate Address of his Daughter, drew a Dagger from his Girdle, and therewith stabb'd her to the Heart. And then, struck with Remorse at so unnatural a Deed, cover'd his Face with a Veil of Silk. Thus acting Agamemnon's Part, when to sulfil the Oracle, he sacrificed his Daughter Iphigenia.

After this, the Empress, overwhelm'd with so many Sorrows, retir'd into a Grove, and hang'd her self with a silken Cord on a Tree. The Emperor, seeing this mournful Spectacle, was resolved no longer to delay his own Death. Wherefore, sollowing her Example, he dispatch'd himself likewise by a String. But he first bit a Vein, and with his Blood writ the sollowing Words:

"What is there now defirable on Earth, after I " am thus betray'd by my own Subjects? I accuse " not the inferior People: They are innocent! "'Tis to the Mandarins I owe my sudden Fall, " with the Ruin of this mighty Empire. Behold " in me, the Royal Line extinct. I am the last of fixteen Emperors. I, that was Lord of so many " spacious Regions, Guardian of the Bedchamber of er the Sun, sole Monarch of the Orient, Lieutenant " to the Gods of the Mines, Possessor of infinite "Treasures, at whose Name an hundred Millions " of my Subjects touched the Ground with their " Foreheads, am now ready to be trampled under " Foot by the basest of my Slaves. But I will " prevent my own Disgrace, and carry this maje-"flick Soul inviolate to my renown'd Fathers; "whose Vengeance, join'd with that of all the "Gods, shall fall on the perfidious Mandarins, who " have betray'd both me, and this exalted State to e Ruin.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 225

A Narrative of these mournful Passages was printed in the Chinese Language, supposed to be done by the Order of the Emperor's Attendants, who follow'd him into the Garden, and were Witnesses of what was said and done. A Copy of which my Brother procured to be translated into Arabick, by a Merchant of our Nation, who understood the Chinese Language, and resided in Pequin.

In fine, my Brother fays, that when he departed from China, he left the Tyrant Lycungz in Possession of the Emperor's Palace where he found an hundred Millions of Ingots in Gold and Silver, besides an inestimable Treasury of Pearls and precious Stones. All which Wealth had been heap'd together by the Frugality of the Chinese Emperors.

By this thou may'ft take an Estimate of the Grandeur and Strength of this formidable Monareby, of which we have had such contemptible. Notions. Neither shalt thou have occasion to be surprised at the monstrous Rise and Fortune of this Rebel, who in so short a time was listed to the Height of Human Sovereignty, when thou considerest, That all Things are subject to Vicis-situde and Change.

That God, who establishes whom he pleases on the Throne of the Earth, and, at the determinated Periods of Empires, deposes such as trust in their Strength and Riches, defend our Sovereign from Treasons, and from the Arrows that sty in Obscurity.

Paris, 13th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER VII. To Darnish Mehemet, Bassa.

W HAT Obligation have I to be concern'd for the Infidels? Or, what Interest in the Uncircumcised? Yet Nature has tied all our Race, in some common Bonds of Affection; and Humanity teaches us, to rejoice at the Deliverance of the Oppressed.

The Kingdom of Naples has long groan'd under the Yoke of Spanish Tyranny. The Labour of the People sufficed not to pay the unreasonable Taxes that were imposed on them. They sweat Blood to become yet more miserable; whilst their cruel Masters having sleec'd them to Nakedness, would take Advantage of their Poverty, to rivet their Chains yet deeper, and render their Servitude past Redemption.

The People were fensible of their Calamity, yet knew not how to shake off the Yoke. It had gall'd them to the Nerves and Sinews; their Strength was gone. Despair of Redress had render'd them supine, and took from them the very Power of meditating their Recovery. But Heaven, which protects the oppressed, has raised up a Youth from among the meanest of the People, to assert the publick Liberty. A Fisherman, who has not seen Four and twenty Winters, has undertaken to restore the ancient Privilèges of the Neapolitans. Who can penetrate into the Methods of eternal Destiny, which makes use of so contemptible Instruments, to check the Power of the greatest Monarchs?

This bold Youth, inspired with a Zeal for the Publick, ran one Day into the Streets, crying with a loud a loud Voice, Long live the King of Spain, but let the corrupt Officers periso. He had no other Weapon, save a Reed in his Hand, but was soon sollow'd by a Multitude of Boys and young Men, with Clubs and Staves, who went along the Streets of that populous City, repeating the Cry after him, Long live the King of Spain, but let the corrupt Officers periso. At first, the Citizens laugh'd at the Infant Tumult; but in less than two Hours, this Fisherman (whose Name was Massaniello) had enrolled above two thousand Boys.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 227

The next Day his Numbers encreased, by the Accession of all forts of lewd and idle Persons, Mal-Contents, Debtors, and such as were desirous of Novelty. Nay, some of the better fort of Citizens shut up their Shops, took Arms, and mingled with the popular Insurrection: So that e'er Mid-day, there were above ten thousand Men and Boys, marching along the Streets, and burning the Custom-Houses with all their Books of Accompts, throughout the City.

When Massaniells beheld himself at the Head of so vast a Multitude, he thought it time to declare the Reason of his raising this Tumult. Wherefore, getting on an eminent Place in one of the Markets, he spoke to his Followers to this Effect:

Rejoice, O ye faithful People, and send up Acclamations to the God of Heaven, who hath this Day put it into your Hearts and Hands to be your own Redeemers. As for me, my Spirit burneth within me, to see the publick Oppression; and I set no Value on my Life, when I first began this glorious Enterprize. One of the Princes threaten'd me with the Galleys, if I persisted: But here are thousands my Witnesses, That instead of searing him, I snote him on the Breast, and sent him away joysul, that be escaped with his Life. O ye faithful People, trust not the Princes or Nobles: They are the Men who eppress you, and would enslave you. Trust in your Arms, and the Justice of your Cause. God has brought you tagether; let nothing separate you till you have freed your Country, your selves, your Wives and Children, from perpetual Sarvitude. Chuse you a Leader, a Man of Courage and Resolution, who is willing to sarvisice his Life for the common Good. As for me, I have hitherto liv'd a Fisherman, and so I intend to die.

The People, exceedingly moved with this Speech, choice him with one Accord for their Leader, crying out with loud Acclamations, Long live Massainello, the Patron of the Neapolitan Liberties.

The first thing he did after he was confirm'd in this Authority, was to set open the Prisons, and list the Prisoners under the Banner of the People.

Then he divided this confused Army into Regiments and Companies; and sent forth a Proclamation throughout Naples, commanding all to take Arms, on pain of having their Houses burnt. So that in a little Time he had above fifty Thousand arm'd Men at his Heels.

Thus accompanied, he marches directly toward the Viceroy's Palace, vested in Cloth of Silver, with a naked Sword in his Hand. He was accompanied by a Cardinal, who undertook to be a Mediator between the Viceroy and the People. His Presence restrain'd the Multitude within some Bounds of Moderation, for they reverenced him as the Father of the City. Yet they burnt above fixty Palaces of the Nobles to the Ground, with all their Furniture and Goods; and it was present Death for any one to rescue or pursoin any thing from the Flames; so rigorously just was this new Law-giver, this Moses of the Neapolitans. It was in vain for the Viceroy to oppose Force against so formidable an Insurrection. He entertain'd the young Fisherman with Ceremonies due to a Prince: And having concluded a Truce, gave him the Title of chief Tribune of the faithful People. This increased the Veneration the Citizens had already conceiv'd for Massianello: So that in a Day or two more he saw himself at the Head of an hundred and fifty thousand armed Men. He gave out all Orders for the Republick, publish'd new Edicts, and all Commissions were iffued in his Name. He procured the Gabels to be for ever abolish'd, restored the People to their ancient Liberty: And in fine, was murder'd by his own Followers.

Let me not feem an Advocate for Sedition, when I tell thee there was something brave and heroick in the Actions of this Youth. So strange a Revolution, in so short a Time, has scarce been heard of in the World: For a beardless Slave to raise himfelf in fixty Days to as absolute and uncontroulable a Sovereignty, as the greatest Monarch on Earth enjoys; to be obey'd by an infinite Number of People, without the least Hesitation or Demur, were it for Life or Death; and all this, without any Motive of Ambition or Interest, but only to affert the publick Liberty, is a convincing Argument of his Virtue; and shews, That Heaven approved his Enterprize. But then again, For him to lose all this Power in four Days more, to be murder'd in cold Blood by his own Party, by the People whose Cause he had so successfully vindicated; this shews the Instability of Human Affairs, and that there is nothing permanent on this-Side the Moon.

I pray

I pray God to inspire the Ministers of the sublime Port, to take such Measures as may preserve the Mussulman Peace. Adieu.

Paris, 13th of the 11th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER VIII.

To Solyman bis Cousin, at Constantinople.

WHEN I clos'd up my last, the Hour of the Post was near expired, and the Messenger who carries my Letters to him, hasten'd my Dispatch, preventing what I had farther to say to thee.

I am sollicitous for thy Welfare, both as thou art a Mussulman, and so near a Relation. Do not forfeit those Titles, by degenerating from thy Kindred, and from all the illuminated of God. Truth is comprized in a little room, but Error is infinite. Thou makest a wrong Inference from the Moderation and Charity of the true Believers, when thou concludest, That because they believe, it shall go well with all honest Men, let their Opinions and Ceremonies be what they will; therefore thou shalt be safe, in retrenching the endless and burthensome Washings (as thou termest them) of the Mussulmans, so long as thou leadest a good meral Life.

Art thou such a Friend to Idleness and Impurity, that thou wilt by a most pitiful Sophistry, cheat thy self of Salvation, rather than take the Pains to wash thy self after the Manner, and at the Times, appointed by the Prophet of God, and practised.

practifed by our Fathers, and all the Faithful throughout the World? If it be allow'd, That such as either out of Ignorance, or hinder'd by some other invincible Cause, do not embrace our boly Law, are not circumcifed, and repair not to the Assemblies of the Faithful, shall nevertheless enter into Paradise, provided they obey the Law of Nature, imprinted on their Hearts; does it follow therefore, That one who has been bred up in the undefiled Faith, who has been circumcifed, and lifting up his Right-hand to Heaven, has pronounced the Seven mysterious Words, which cannot be repealed; does it follow, I say, that such an one shall be regarded by God or his Prophet, any otherwise than as an Heretick or an Infidel, if he live not up exactly to the Graces that have been given him? No, affure thy felf, if thou art in the Number of these, thou art an Apostate; thy Virtues are Vices, and all thy good Works are an Abomination.

Remember the Piety and magnanimous Zeal of Assan Hali thy Grandfather; who, when he was taken Prisoner by the Cossacks, was entertain'd with extreme Rigour and Severity. Nevertheles, a certain Jew in the City who knew him, brought him every Day, by Permission of the Keeper, as much Water as would suffice to wash him, and to quench his Thirst. But one Day, as he went with his accustom'd Load, and was entring the Gate of the Prison, the Keeper, either out of Malice or Wantonness, spilt most of the Water on the Ground, forbidding the Jew, at the same time, to bring any more that Day.

The honest Hebrew went in with the Remainder of the Water, and deliver'd it to the Prisoner; who presently prepared to wash himself, after the accustom'd Manner of the Mussulmans.

The

The Jew seeing that, told him, There was not Water enough to quench his Thirst. And therewith related to him what the Keeper had done. I see there is but a little (reply'd the virtuous old Man) but be that drinks, or eats, before he has wash'd himself, is guilty of desiling his Soul, and is not worthy to be number'd among the true Believers. Therefore it is better for me to die for Thirst, than violate the Law brought down from Heaven, and transgress the Traditions of my Fathers. Having said this, he wash'd himself, being resign'd to Providence.

Cousin, deceive not thy self with vain Opinions, nor suffer Hypocrites to seduce thee. Imitate the Adder, and stop thy Ears against the crasty Insinuations of Hereticks. It is reported of this little Serpent, that by natural Instinct, being sensible when a Magician is about to utter Words, which being heard will ensure it, lays one Ear close to the Ground, and with its Tail stops the other, to the end the Enchantment may have no Effect.

Admit not any Man to thy Conversation, who shall attempt to warp thee from the Simplicity of the Faith and Obedience which thou owest to the Apostle of God. Without Water, there is no Purity on this side the Grave. That Element has a Force in it, of which thou art not aware. 'Tis the third in the Rank of living Principles. 'Tis the Tabernacle of the Winds; the Seraglic of the generative Spirit; the Stage of Wonders. In fine, it is the Purisher of every thing that has Breath.

Thou knowest, That to serve the Necessities of the Prophet and his Army, Understanding and Speech was given to a Fountain in Arabia, which having, promised to follow him to the Place of his Repose, made a Channel through the Desart, and kept Pace with the Troops of the Faithful, 'till they they came to Medina Talnabi; that so the fubmissive to the Will of Heaven, might not want that Element, without which Life it self would be a Burden and a Curse.

And yet thou speakest contemptibly of Water, as a very indifferent Thing, whether we use it or not, any other ways than to quench our Thirst.

Thus, making no Difference between the many Advantages we reap from that Element, and that common Use to which the Beasts put it. In how many Places of the Alcoran does the Holy Prophet record the Mercy of God, in giving us Water that is fresh and not salt? How does he celebrate his Wisdom and Goodness, for directing the Clouds to barren and dry Places? Thou can'st not be ignorant, That it is one of the Encomiums of Paradise, That there are Gardens wherein flow many Rivers: And after all this, wilt thou despise so holy and blessed a Gift, without which, Earth and Heaven, Men and Angels, could not be completely happy?

Go learn then of the Indian Idolaters, who have never heard of the Book of Glory: Go learn of these Barbarians, to prize their santify'd Creatures. They travel many hundred of Leagues to bathe themselves in the Waters of Ganges. With those incorruptible and all-purging Streams, the Brachmans fill certain Vessels, and transport the invaluable Liquor, to the utmost Parts of that wide Empire. They travel on Foot, sometimes two thousand Miles together, each Man with his Load of that precious Water, to supply the Wants of those who live so remote from the River. So that a Bottle of it is many times fold to the Princes and Nobles, for two hundred Sequins, or eight hundred Roupies: And yet for all this, those very Princes would not die with a safe Conscience, had they not at least once in their Lives made a Pilgrimage to this renown'd River, and bath'd themselves in the Waves

Which blot out Sins.

O Cousin, let the Example of these Infidels make thee blush at thy Impiety, and excite thee to a diligent and indispensible Practice of Cleanness: So shalt thou have a found Mind, in a healthy Body: And the Angel of thy Nativity will not shun thy Person. Adieu.

Paris, 7th of the 12th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER IX.

To the Kaimacham.

HE Defeat of the Venetians and Morlacks in Bosna, has reach'd these Parts. That News is not unwelcome to Mabmut. But I could wish our General had used his Victory with more Moderation. The Christians term him Barbarian, Savage, Devil incarnate, and load him with Execrations: For, having taken Prisoner the Captain of the Morlacks, he caused him to be flay'd alive, and afterwards to be impaled. This Captain was an Ecclesiastick, they call him Scepbano Sorich; and in Honour of his Zeal and Fidelity, they entitle him, The good Priest. They applaud his Magnanimity and Courage in Battle; and no less do they extol his Constancy, during the Torments of so cruel and ignominious a Death. But I tremble to think of the Blasphemies and Curses they utter against our boly Prophet, and all the Muffulmans! For the cruel Execution has scandaliz'd the Nazarenes, and imbitter'd them, even to Fury. Their Revenge is implacable: They would go to Hell themselves, provided the true Faithful might be damn'd for Company.

Digitized by Google

What will our Divine Law-giver say? Or, what Apology will our General make, when the Sent of God shall charge him, with driving so many Thousand Souls into an irreconcilable Hatred of the undefiled Faith? For they look not on this as the Action of a private Man, but of one who represents the Person of our august Sovereign, the great Protector of the Law brought down from Heaven. They suppose him to be honour'd with the particular Instructions of his Master: And therefore they say, The Sultan has authoriz'd this unheard-of Cruelty; and, That our Religion countenances Tyranny, and the most nefandous Method of shedding innocent Blood.

I am no Advocate for Infidels; yet suffer me to vindicate Nature, which is the common Parent of us all. Suffer me to be sollicitous for the Honour of our boly Prosession, which is blemish'd by this inhumane Murder. What Offence had this unhappy Captain given, that deserv'd so dire a Punishment? Was it, Because he sought valiantly, and perform'd Wonders in Desence of his Country? This is nothing but what becomes every honest Man to do. And, had our General been truly brave, he would have entertain'd his Prisoner with a Respect due to his Merit.

Who was a more inveterate Enemy of the Mussulmans than the renown'd Ischenderbeg, Prince of Albania? Who more valiant or successful, again the Ottoman Armies? It is recorded of him, That he never shun'd a Battel, never sled from his Enemies, never shrunk from Perils, nor was ever wounded but once, in all his Life. And yet he sustained a continual War, from two successive fuccessive Ofman Emperours; defeated seven Viziers with their Forces; took all their Ammunition and Baggage; and, in several Combats, slew with his own Hands above Two thousand Mabometans.

Our Fathers did not basely revenge themselves for all this, but cherish'd a Veneration for this beroick Enemy, and honour'd the very Dust of such an extraordinary Person. For, after his Death, having conquer'd Albania, they sought out his Tomb, where they personm'd their Devotions, as at the Sepulchre of a Prophet. They open'd the Dormitory of the defunct Warrior, and, with religious Solemnity, took up his Bones, sharing the honour'd Relicks among them; and wrapping them in Silk, wore them continually at their Breasts, esteeming them as facred Amulets against Misfortunes.

Surely our General would blush at an Example of so great Virtue. But perhaps he was incensed, because his Captive was a Priest: Mistaken Zeal might prompt him to this horrid Butchery. Thou, who art Justice it self, wilt not approve his bloody Passion, when thou considerest, That the Priests of Jesus are Men as well as others; and if they live in Error, the Fault is in their Education. However, many of them are humble, chafte, fober, and Lovers of Virtue. If there be others, whose corrupt Lives have contradicted this Character, let the Crime and the Punishment rest on their Heads. It is not reasonable that the Innocent should fuffer for the Faults of the Guilty. The Captain of the Merlacks had the Reputation of a devout and just Man, and a stout Champion for his Country: Had he been taken for a Spy, or an Assassin, the Law of Arms would have adjudg'd him to Death. Yet such was the Clemency of Porfenna.

Digitized by Google

Porsenna, King of the Hetrurians; That when Mutius Scavola, a valiant Roman, came into his Camp, with design to murder him, but by Mistake stabbid one of the Captains, thinking it had been Porsenna; and to revenge that Miscarriage on himself, thrust his Hand into the Fire, 'till the Flesh was consum'd to the Bones: The King astonish'd at his undaunted Spirit, sent him away in Peace, raised the Siege of Rome, and enter'd into a strict Friendship with that Nation: Such Honour he bore to the Fortitude of his Enemy, and design'd Murderer. But the Captain of the Morlacks was not taken under these Circumstances: He lost his Liberty in the Heat of Battel, bravely combating at the Head of his Army.

Wouldest thou know the Grounds then of our General's Cruelty? It was purely, for the sake of a Jest. There went a Report, That when this Priest was born his Body was all over raw, so that the Physicians were forced, by Art, to supply him with a Skin. Our cruel General, to sport himself in the poor Man's Misery, commanded him to be slay'd alive; uttering at the same time this inhuman Sarcasm; There was no Reason that be should carry a Skin out of the World, who brought none in. This is attested by two Gentlemen who were made Prisoners with their Captain, heard these Words, saw him executed, and afterwards made their Escape.

The Nazarenes vow to revenge this unparallel'd Cruelty on all the Mussulmans that fall into their Hands, if this Butcher (as they term him) be suffer'd to go unpunish'd. I tell thee, such barbarous Actions draw down the Vengeance of Heaven on those that commit them; and excite the very Beasts of the Earth to make War, and rid the World of fuch Monsters.

Thou

Thou knowest what Use to make of this Intelligence: I will not pretend to instruct the second Minister in the Ottoman Empire.

Paris, 7th of the 12th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER X.

To the Mufti.

If there be any Truth in what the Aftrologers tell us, That the Stars have Influence on the Government of the Earth, one would think that Spain lies under some malignant Aspett.

The Fortune of that Kingdam has for a long time run retrograde. They have had nothing but Losses by Sea and Land. The Revolution in Portugal, the Revolt of Catalonia and Roussian, the Loss of Ormus in Persia, and the Desection of Goa, with other rich Towns of Trassick in the Indies, came one upon the Back of another.

Since which there have been many Towns and Castles taken from the Spaniards in Flanders. The French made an Insurrection in Palermo, breaking open the Prisones; and releasing the Prisones: And grew to such a Head, That the Viceroy, fearing they would revenge the Tragedy of the Sicilian Vespers, to pacify the Multitude, was forced to repeal the Edicts for Taxes, and disannul them for ever; and to pass an Act of general Indemnity, both to the Rabble, and to the Prisoners, whom they had freed.

This tumultuous Spirit pass'd from thence to the Kingdom of Naples: and there like an Infection, soon spread it self through all Parts, both of of City and Country: Two hundred thousand Men took up Arms, to vindicate the Privileges of the Neapolitans, under the Conduct of a poor young Fisherman. I have already transmitted to the sublime Port, a Relation of this formidable Sedition; wherein it may be thought, I have difcover'd too much Tenderness to the Infidels, and feem'd to favour the Violences of a Faction. But I hope thou wilt acquit me, when thou confiderest, That these Governments of the Nazarenes are not to be compared to the facred Ofman Empire, which is establish'd by a Divine Right; it having been determin'd by the Angel, That he who should possess the glorious Dormitory of the Seat of God, should be entituled, The Sovereign of all the Kings on Earth. Therefore it would be a Crime of the highest Nature, to raise a Tumult or Sedition, within the Territories of our august Emperor, whose Dominion is confirm'd to him for ever, by a Patent from Heaven. But the Case of the Nazarene Princes is different; who being professed Enemies to the Messenger of God, have no other Right to any thing, but what their Swords purchase. And therefore, when they prey upon others, and by Rapine and Spoil augment their Riches, it is no wonder if the great Avenger of Crimes, stirs up some undaunted Spirits, to free their Country from Slavery and Ruine.

Those who are curious, have remark'd many observable Circumstances in this Revolution at Naples: As that it was foretold by an Astrologer, a considerable time before it happen'd, who pointed out the very Year wherein it should come to pass. The Extraordinary Eruptions also of Mount Vesuvius some Years ago, were esteem'd as Presages of some approaching Troubles in the State: For it rain'd Ashes on the City of Naples.

I spoke of this Mountain in one of my former Letters.

"Tis reported also, That about the same Hour wherein Massianello, the Ringleader of the Seditious, was murder'd, there was seen a Man hovering in the Air, over the principle Temple of Naples, with a Sword in his Hand, which he was putting up in his Scabbard: And that a Voice was at the same Time heard from on high, to utter these Words, His Labour is finish'd, give him Rest.

This is certain, That whilft he was at the Head of an hundred thousand Men, seven Assass were hired by some of the Princes to shoot him; yet none of the Bullets could penetrate his Body, tho' unarm'd, and only cover'd with his fishing Rags: And it was evident, that these Bullets smote him in divers Places, his Garments being mark'd with them, and he stagger'd with the Force of the Blows.

These are extraordinary Occurrences and would tempt one to believe, That this young Fitherman was the Instrument of Providence, and that Heaven protected both him and his Caufe.

'Tis true indeed, it feem'd at last, as if he were abandon'd by that Divine Power, which had carried him through so important an Enterprize, in that he was slain by his own Soldiers. But then it must be remember'd, That this was not done till his Work was finish'd, and he went beyond his Commission. Want of Sleep, the Multitude of Affairs, and much Wine, had impaired his Reason, and renderd him frantick; so that his Actions were insupportable, and his own Admirers grew weary of him. After his Death his Head was cut off, and carried up and down * the Streets on a Lance, and his Body was dragg'd thorough the Kennel. Yet the very next Day, the Multitude, to shew their own Fickleness, took took the dead Body our of a Ditch, where they had laid it all Night: They washed and embalmed it, and having join if the Head to it, carried it with great Pomp and Solemnity to the principal Temple of Naples, attended with Drums and Trumpets, and above a thousand Priefs, with Torches in their Hands, a Crown of Goldwars put on his Head, and a Scepter in his Hand.

Vol. 11k & Spy at Paris! 241

Thus the Neapolitans honourd that beardless Youth, who in Ten Days time had caused such a Revolution, as is scarce to be parallel'd; For he was an absolute Monarch, in effect, during that Time. And of him it may be said, as it was once of an Emperor, That during his whole Reign, there was neither Spring, nor Autumn, nor Winter: For his Royalty begun and ended in the seventh Moon. .

By Letters from Nathan Ben Saddi, at Vienna, I perceive he is molested with Scruples about his Religion, being defirous to build upon the furest Foundation. I fent him the best Advice I could. without making my self a Hypocrite; which, thou knowest, is more offensive to God, than an open Sinner. I drew up an Abstract of the Muffulman Records, and presented him with the fatthful Genealogy, from Imael, the Son of the Patriarch Ibrabim, down to our Holy Prophet. This I did to rectify an old inhierent Error of the " Jews, who boalt, That only the Sons of Hane were true Believers. I endeavourd not to pro-felyte him, by Sophistry and Artifice; but referred him, for better Satisfaction, to the Writings of the Ancients. I promifed to furnish him with Books of dur Law, and the Comments of our boly, Doctors. This is impossible for me to perform, whill Pam in this Place; unless thou, who art a Guide of those who seek the Truth, voitchfafeit?

Digitized by Google

to second my Zeal. I address to thee, sovereign Prelate of the Faithful, in Behalf of a Descendent from the yeunger Brether of Ismael; in Behalf of one circumcised, but not in the right Way. Favour him with thy Divine Instructions, and supply him with Treatises of Light and Reason. A seasonable Application may bring this Hebrew into the Number of the Musfulmans, for he is already disgusted at the Synagogue.

But if I have prefumed too far, in endeavouring to snatch a Soul from the Paws of Taget, correct me in thy Wisdom, for I am but as an Infant before thee.

Paris, 15th of the 1st Moon, of the Year 1648:

LETTER XI.

The Beginning of this Letter is wanting in the Italian Translation, the Original Paper being torn.

All Mens Hearts are filled with Joy, for this prosperous News, whilst I mourn for the Dishonour of our Arms. Nothing but sad Tidings grate my Ears from those Parts, and more melancholy Presages possess my Soul. Methinks I see thick Clouds gathering o'er the Imperial City. My Sleep is disturb'd with fearful Visions: I start in my Bed; and walking lay my Hand on my Sword, as if some Danger were at hand: I dream of Tumults and Disorders, Neighing of Horses, and Clashing of Arms in the Streets of Constantinople. I pray God avert the Omen.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 243

It is reported here, That Ali, the Sangia-Bey of Lippa, is taken Prisoner; and that his Son was tormented to Death before his Face, in a manner peculiar to the Invention of the most barbarous Tyrants: For they caused sharp Thorns to bethrust between his Nails and his Flesh, which creates an intolerable Anguish: They laid him. on a Bed of Iron Spikes, and poured melted Lead, Drop by Drop, on all Parts of his Flesh. Then they made a small Fire, and roasted him flowly to Death. If he chanced to groan, or make the least Complaint, in the midst of those grievous Tortures, they bid him remember the good Priest Sorech, who set him an Example of Constancy and Courage, in that he never shed a Tear, or so much as figh'd, when he was flay'd alive.

Thou feest that Revenge is sweet, even to those who having receiv'd no Injury in their own Perfons, yet are touched to the Quick, with the Violence that is done to another. This will appear in the Humour of the Italians, who profecute their Enemies with irreconcileable Hatred and Malice, whole Families being often engaged in executing the Refentments of two fingle Persons, who first began the Quarrel: But much more forceable is this Passion in those, who have been notoriously hurt themselves. And the Revenge of a certain Captain was extravagant; who being inform'd that his General had debauch'd his Wife. took an Opportunity to fingle him out from all other Company, pretending to walk in the Fields. When he had him there alone, he clapp'd a Pistol to his Breast, threatning to kill him . forthwith, if he moved Hand or Foot. Then he upbraided him with what he had done, in such Language, as convinced the General, his Life ! was in extreme Danger. Wherefore he humbled M 2 himfelf.

himself, and consessed his Crime; begging of the Captain to spare his Life, and he would prefer him forthwith to the best Office in the Army, next his own. But the surious Italian would not set his Henour so cheap. He forced him to deny Gad, and utter many Blasphemies, in hopes of saving his Life: And when he had thus done, the Captain said, Nove my Revenge is complete, fince I shall fond thee Bady and Saul to the Devil. With that he pistol'd him.

But, leaving these Institutes to their diabolical Passions, I am concern'd at the Captivity of thy Brother; if it be true which is related here, That he was taken in his Return from Genea to Constantinople. It will cost the Bassa of Algiers a thou-fand Crowns to ranfom him.

Addieu Renarba. And, if thou art defirous to raffe thy felf, take that Method which I have now proposed to thee. God be propitious to thy Endeavours.

Paris, 4th of the 2d Meen, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XII.

To the Venerable Mufti.

THOU wilt say, The Neapolitans are a restless People, when thou shalt know, that there have been no loss than Forty general Insertestions in this Kingdom; since its sift Separation, from the Gresian Empire, whereof it was formerly a Members and that, in the Space of two Years, they have had five Kings, all of different Mations.

One would have thought, that after the Death of Massianello, the Ring-leader of the late Innovation, the popular Heats would have slacken'd, and the People return'd to their Duby; but the passionate Desire of Liberty caused them to continue in Arms, till the Consumation of their Privileges should come from the King of Spain.

In the mean time, Don John of Austria, who lay before the City with a Fleet of Fifty Galloons, play'd upon them incessantly with his Cannon by Sea, and the Castles batter'd them by Land.

Cardinal Mazarini, who has the earliest Intelligence of foreign Transactions, has had a principal Hand in fomenting this Flame. For as footh as the News of Massacle's Death arrived here he dispatched away Couriers to Rome, with Instructions to the French Embassacle at that Cours, requiring him to use all possible Means to therish the Tumults in Naples, and not neglect so sair an Opportunity of reducing that Kingdom under the Protestion of France.

It will not appear illiange, That this great Genius should aim at the Conquest of Naples, when we confider, That this Kingdom abounds in all manner of Riches, to which its fortunate Bituation contributes not a little; for it lies in the most temperate Part of the World: And the Inhabitants are not found to any People of Europe, in material Courage and Bravery. This is a Balt which tempts the Cardinal; who is not ignorant how valiantly the Ancestors of the present Neapolitans behaved themselves in the Wars of Cafar and Pompey, and those between the Romans and Carthaginians. Nor are they lefs. relebrated for the flout Refillance they made against the Huns, Goths, and Vandals. this Kingdom, were it once brought under the French M. 3

French Dominions, would prove a Nursery, from whence this Monarch might draw many thousands of excellent Soldiers, to serve him in his Wars.

Befides, it would be more commodious for him to make Incurfions from hence into the Pope's Territories, if there should arise any Difference between the two Courts: as there often do, about the Rights of the Courts of this Crown in Rome, and other Privileges, to which they pretend.

Therefore the French Embaffador, according to the Instructions of Mazarini, sent Commissioners to treat privately with the People of Naples, offering them Two Millions of Crowns, Twenty Galleons, with Eight and fifty Gallies, and other Vessels. They accepted the Proposal, being weary of the Spanish Government, and defirous of Novelty, encourag'd also by what those Commissioners represented to them concerning the Success of the English, who by standing on their Guard, and using that Power which God and Noture had given them, for the Defence of their Lives and Liberties, were now, in a manner, become a free People, having abolish'd the Monarchy, and let up a Commonwealth: And this, they told them, Was also done by Cardinal Mazarini's Counfels and Affiftance. Now all the Cry in Naples, was, Let France and the People of England flourish; and let the faithful Neapolitans affert their own Liberty. So blind were these People, as not to confider, That in putting themselves under the Protection of the French. they did but exchange one Bondage for another, it being impossible for any foreign Prince to keep this Kingdom, and pay all his Officers, Civil and Military, together with those under their their Commands, with much less Charge than the Revenues amount to. And the French are as good at inventing new Taxes, as any Court in Europe.

However, the Neapolitans were enchanted with the Thoughts of fo much Gold, and other Affistance offer'd by the French Commissioners; and fweeten'd with their fair Words, and glorious Promises. So that they immediately sent Deputies, to entreat the Duke of Guife, who was then . at Rome, to come and protect them, in taking on him the chief Command of their Arms.

This Prince, thinking it 'a generous Action, to relieve the Oppressed; and, that at the same time he should do a confiderable Service to the King of France, in rendering him Master of this noble and opulent Kingdom, went to Naples: Where, at first, he was received with infinite Applause, was made their General, took an Oath of Fidelity to the People, did many notable Services. but was in the End betray'd, and sent Prisoner to Spain.

If the Generofity and brave Refolution of this Prince, has requir'd Commendation from some, in attempting to rescue these People from the Tyranny of their Governors, yet his Conduct is call'd in Question by others, who say, He discover'd but little Prudence in trufting himself to the Neapolitans, who had already facrificed two of their Generals. (For, after the Death of Massianello, they choic another Captain, whom they called the Prince of Massa: This Prince falling under their Suspicion, was beheaded by the inconstant People.)

Tis certain. That there is little Confidence to be put in the Multitude, whose Passions ebb and flow, and are more tempestuous than the Sea. Yet a brave and generous Mind will shun no M 🗚 Dangers Dangers to ferve his Prince and his Country; for whom it is a glorious Martyrdom to die. There , is no great Undertaking mithout Hazards; and he that is afraid to venture his Liberty and Life in a good Caufe, is not worthy to bear Arms. Had the Duke of Guife succeeded, his Conquest of Naples had made him Viceroy of one of the largest Kingdoms in Europe. It is faid to be Five hun-- dred Leagues in Circuit, containing Twelve am-. ple Provinces; Twenty Archbishopricks; Bishopricks, one hundred twenty feven; thirty Cailles; Barons one thousand four hundred; Earls, fifty three; forty Marquelles; thirty four Dukes, and twenty Princes. The Inhabitants of this Kingdom are said to be above two Millions. The ordinary Revenues of the King amount to three Millions of Crowns yearly, helides the soluntary Donatives which have been given by the Subjects of this State to their Kings, within the Space of forty Years, amounting to twenty eight Millions, and fix hundred thousand Duckets. This Kingdom is water'd by a hundred and fifty Rivers, befides ten Lakes stored with all manner of Fish; among which is one called Averue, over which if any Birds fly, they immediately drop down dead. The ancient Paguns had strange Opinions of this Lake, it being the Place where they used to facrifice Men to the infernal Gods. And, hard by, , is the Cave of one of the Sibyls.

There are thirty high Mountains in this Country, of which Adons relates many firange and delightful Raffages, (for 'tis from him I received this Account of the Kingdom.) I will not trouble thee with a Repetition of all that this Jew tells me, only one thing is worthy of Remark.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS.

He fays, That the Bodies of the three young-Hebrews, who were put into the burning Oven by the Babybonian Monarch, because they would. not adore his Idols, are preserv'd in a Mosque on one of these Mountains. And that on the said Hill, no Eggs, Flesh, or Milk, will endure an Hour without Putrefaction, but presently breed an infinite Number of Worms. He speaks in the Praise of these Mountains, which are cloath'd with Vineyards, Gardens, and Woods, on the Topand Sides; and in their Bottoms, have very rich. Mines of Gold, Silver, Copper, Iron, Crystah. Alabafter, Adamant. In fine Adonai, who has travell'd over all this Kingdom, calls it, The fertilest Region of all Italy, which is esteem'd the Paradise of Europe.

Dost thou not think now, venerable Guide of the Elect, that the Duke of Guise had reason to prefer the Honour of conquering fo renown'd a Kingdom, to the Safety of his Person? Or wilt thou not rather conclude, That the Reduction of this happy State would be an Expedition worthy of the Ottoman Arms? It is certain, that the Riches and Plenty of this Region have tempted more Nations to invade it than any other. Kingdom on Earth: It having been the Prize, at which. no less than Five and twenty several Nations have:

aim'd.

Cardinal Mazarini is much troubled at the Dake of Guile's Captivity, and has offer'd great Sums of Money for his Ranforn , but the King of Spain rejects all Proposals of that Nature. So that; 'tis thought, the Cardinal will contrive some. Way for the Dake's Bscape, either by bribing his. Keepers, or by some secret Stratagem.

Iram not much concern'd for the Infidelr; but. it would be no small low to hear, That some Care were taken, for the Redemption of Mahometer M 5.

Capre, who, thou knowest, has not deserv'd ill of the sublime Port. Adieu, holy Patriarch, and forget not Mahmut in thy Addresses to Heaven.

Paris, 27th of the 3d Moon, of the Year 1647.

LETTER XIII.

To Abdel Melec Muli Omar, Superintendent of the College of Sciences at Fez.

HOU to whom the Issues of Paradise are revealed, and the Road of the Angels when they come down and go up through the Seven Heavens! Thou that can'ft marshal the Host of the Stars, and understandest the Discipline of the Armies living and strong, the Orders of the Potentates encamp'd in the Fields of Light, the domestick Guards of the Throne, blessed for ever; tell me the Age of the World, and declare the Beginning of Time. Resolve me, Whether this mighty Fabrick be but of Yesterday, that is, of Five or fix thousand Years standing, as the Jews and Christians say; or, Whether the Years of its Duration be not past a Calcule.

The Visions of thy Progenitor, the Lieutenaut to the Seat of God, are extant in the Arabick Tongue In them it is written, My Soul on a fudden became as though it had Wings; and Spirit enter'd me, and a fubtil Wind lifted meny to the Top of Mount Uriel, subere I beheld marvellous Things. I looked behind me, and faw the Ages that were past; and lo, they were without Number, or Beginning. I beheld the four Seasons of the Year, ever returning at their accustom'd Time, and the Sun for fook not his Course, for a thousand thousand Generations. I counted a Million of Ages, and yet there appeared not an Hour, wherein Darkness, bad peffesi'd the Abyla of Matter, or wherein the endless Firmament was not illuminated by the Moon and Stars. Whilft I consider'd these Things, a Liquor was given me to drink by an unknown Hand, it was of the Colour of Amber; when I had tasted it, I felt a marvellous Force in my Body, and my Eyes were more piercing than an Eagle's. Another Wind, more powerful than the former, blew out of a Cloud, and carried me up to an exceeding bigb Place, far above the tallest Mountains: There I trod in the fost Air, as in a Pavement of Marble. I was ravish'd at these Things; and the Exaltation of my State made me forget my Mortality. I bebeld the Earth at a vest Distance under my Feet, as one that did not belong to it; it look'd like a shining Globe, not much unlike the Moon, but far bigger. All the living Generations which had successively inhabited the Earth from its Nativity, First came a Race of Centaurs, then of Satyrs, next of Angels, and last of Men. While I marvelled at these Things, a Voice reach'd my Ears, as from behind me, saying, Toese are the four Ages of the World, and the four Species of Beings to whom I gave the Possession of the Earth; but, for the Impiety of the three former, I have exterminated them. And when Men shall have compleated the Measure of their Sins, I will cause the Trumpet to sound, and all things shall retire into the Cave, of Silence and Darkness. Having beard this, I found myself in a Moment on the Earth, which I had before seen afar off; then I knew that I had been in a Trance, &c. I do М 6

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 251

I do not rehearfe this Vision to teach thee any new Thing, venerable President of the Southern Sages, (for, I know, the Archives of thy College are replenished with all manner of excellent Treatifes, and that thou art no Stranger to the Writings of the Prophets) but to erave thy Interpretation of fo great a Mystery, and to reason with thee about the World's Duration. My Satisfaction would be finall, in contemplating the various Beauties of the Universe, the Qualities of the Elements, the Natures of living Things, the Virtues of Plants and Minerals, with the Force of the Heavenly Bodies, were I affured that these Things were not always so. That Thought would damp my greatest Enjoyments, if I were convinc'd, That so many Splendors, Riches and Pleafures, as this Visible Frame affords, were not disclosed for Millions of Ages, but lay hid in the Bosom of Eternity. Methinks it is too low an Opinion of the Omnipotent Goodness, and looks as if the Authors of it suspected God of Ency: Who when he night have made infinite Myriads of Creatures happy, in these visible Emanations of his Divinity, without either Beginning or Ending of Time; yet, according to their Dollrine, contented himself, to let only a determinate Number taite of his Munificence, for a few Centuries of Years. This is not fuitable to the Chara-Eter of that infinite Being, the eternal Source of all Perfections.

What then is meant by those Four Ages; and the Four Species of Beings, which were shew'd to the exalted of God in that boly Vision; Tell me, great Light of Africk, Is it repugnant to Reason or Faith, to believe, That the Earth has been inhabited from Evernity; fince our boly Dostors teach as, that it was peopled long before the Creation of Adam? No Musuman, That has ever gone the facest Pitgrimage, but has visited Mount Araffa, where Adam first saw Eve bis Wife. Where he has been instructed in the History of that first . Father of Mankind; and how that before his Time the Earth was inhabited by Angels, who being commanded to adore Adam, refused it, and were turn'd to Devils, being expell'd from the Earth. Thou knowest moreover, That it is in the facred Traditions, That God gave to Adam a Wife, whose Name was Alileth; but that she, being of the Race of these Devils, refused to obey Adam: Whence it came to pass, that they lived in continual Quarrels and Enmity, for the Space of Five Hundred Years; 'till at length Alileth flew up into the Air, and abandon'd her Husband. Of which, when Adam complain'd to God, he sent Three mighty Angels in Persuit of her, commanding them to tell her, That if she would return to her Husband, it should go well with her; But if she would not, a Hundred of her Children should die every Day. The Angels for low'd her, and over-took her on the Red-Sed': where they threaten'd to drown her, unless she would return to her Husband. But she made Excuses, and told them, She was created to defire young Children. Then the Angels laid Hands on her; when she, to pacify them, swore by the Bottom of Hell, That whensoever the Names of them Three should be written on any Schedule. that she should have no Power to hurt the Infants's they difmis'd her. After this, God compassionating Adam's Solitude, gave him another Wife, call'd Eve.

This Tradition confirms the Vision of the Prophet; and we need not doubt, that the Earth was inhabited before Adam's Time: And if that be granted, Why might it not be peopled for Millions of Ages, as well as for the smallest

Term

Term that Ignorance or Error may affign to its Duration?

I have discoursed with several of the Jewish Rabbi's, and Christian Dotters, on this Subject, Men of abstruse Learning and sublime Thoughts: yet I can find but a few, who are emancipated from the Prejudices of a superstitious Education. They have been, from their Infancy, prepoffes'd with a false Notion of the Works of God; believing them to be Finite, both in Extent of Space and Time. They circumscribe this visible World, within I know not what flaming Circle; and believe the first Matter itself, to be but Five Days older than Adam, taking each of those Days for the Space of Four and twenty Hours, wherein the Sun finishes his diurnal Circuit through the Heavens. They confider not that, according to their own Bible, there was Light and Darkness, and consequently Day and Night, before the Sun was created. But how long those Days and Nights were, is not determin'd by Mofes: Yet in another Part of their Bible, it is faid, That a Day with God is a Thousand Years; and a Thousand Years is a Day. So that, according to this Interpretation, Adam was not created till above Five thousand Years after the Beginning of the World: Yet when I bring this positive Place of their own Scripture against the Nazarene Sages, they shuffle it off with empty Evasions; and rather, than believe the indefinite Antiquity of the World, they contradict their own Sense and Reason, invalidate the Testimony of a Prophet, deny their . Faith, and appear unmask'd Infidels.

Both they and the Jews have corrupted the Truth with many Errors; and we must seek farther, for the original Science of Nature. The Illuminated of God have always taught, That the Earth was inhabited long, before the Appearance pearance of Adam. And all the Eastern Sages believe a Series of Generations to have dwelt on this Globe, for indeterminate Ages.

I have a Brother lately come from the Indies: He relates strange Things of certain Books, which are only in the Hands of the Brachmans. They are written in a Language, which none understand but these Priests; yet a Language as copious as any other, and taught in their Colleges by Rule. These Books contain a History of the World, which, they say, is above Thirty Millions of Years old. They divide the Term of its Duration into four Ages; three of which, they say, are already past, and a good Part of the Fourth. Now I would fain know, Who wrote these Books; and at what Time, and where this Language was spoken? They call it the Holy Language; saying, That it was the first spoken on Earth. It is strange, That no History should mention so Divine a Speech. We have the Chronology of the Latin and Greek; and can give an Account when and where they were spoken, though they are now grown obsolete, and no otherwise to be learn'd, but in the Schools and Academies. This argues the Antiquity of the Bramins Language and Books, in regard they fall not within any other Record, fave their own, which says, They are as old as the World. For if this Affertion were falle, the Imposture would have been discover'd as soon as broach'd. and the learned Sages of the East would quickly have disprov'd so manifest a Lye. There seems to me something extraordinary in this Pretension of these Indian Philosophers, and I would gladby be convinced of the Truth. Methinks it is an illustrious Idea of the Divine Perfections, when one conceives all this vast and endless Concatenation of Beings, to flow from the Eternal Nature, as Rays from the Sun: And that they can no more be separated from it, than those Beams can from that vifible Fountain of Light. It will not be difficult then to interpret the Hiftory of Moses, by this Register of the Bramins, and reconcile the fix Days of the one, with the four Ages of the other; since a Day, in the Divine Sense, may amount to Millions of Years, as well as to a Thoufand. And it will be more congruous and agreeable to believe, That after the Birth of the first Matter, there elaps'd many Ages, before it was wrought into such an infinite Variety of Appearances, as we now behold; and that the five Days which Mojes computes, before the Production of Adam, might be some Millions of Years: In which time, the divine Architett gradually drew from the Abysis of Matter, the Sun, Moon, Stars, Plants and Animals, which may ferve also to illustrate the Vision of the boly Ancestor, with which I begun this Discourfe.

Adieu, sublime Intelligence of the Torrid Zone, and favour Mabmut with a Transcript of thy Thoughts concerning these Things. But if thy Silence shall condemn my Presumptions and Importunity, I will wait for thy Answer, till the Platonick Year, when, according to the Dostrine of that Philosopher, we shall all be alive again.

Paris, 19th of the 4th Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XIV.

· To the Mufti.

IN a former Dispatch to thy Santity, I have acquainted thee with the Insurrection in Palermo; mentioning the Fear of the Viceroy, left the French in that Island should then take their Opportunity to revenge the proverbial Cruelty of the Sicilian Vespers. If thou art unacquainted with that Tragedy, I will inform thee in brief.

About three hundred and threefcore Years ago, there reign'd in Sicily one of the Royal Blood of France, they call him Charles of Anjou. He had French Garrisons in all the Cities of that Kingdom: But these Soldiers committed so many latellences as render'd em odious and insupportable to the Nations, who therefore resolved to exterminate them.

The French are very licentious in their Casquests, meither sparing Men in their Anger, nor Women in their Lust. They make no Difference between the Noble and the Vulgar, but sacrifice all the Regards of Honour and Civility to their impetuous Appetites.

They were guilty of innumerable Rapes and Violences in Sicily among the measur People, and formetimes extended their Rusleness to Persons of the best Quality. It was common for them to affront both Virgins and Matrons as they went along the Streets, by thrusting their Hands under their Garments, under Pretence of searching for hidden Arms. Among the rest, the Wise of a certain Lord in Padermo, going to pay her Devotions at the Temple, was seized by the Command of the Captain of the Gaurds, and stripp'd naked naked before all the Soldiers, in order to discover certain treasonable Papers, which they suspected she carried about her; but finding none, she upbraided the Captain with Inhumanity, in offering so gross an Affront to a Lady of her Rank. He seeming to be forry for the Indignity she had received, begged her Pardon, and retiring with his Soldiers out of the Room where she was, lest her to put on her Apparel. In the mean while he was enslamed with a furious Passion for this Lady, (she being very beautiful;) and having sent the Soldiers away, he returned to the Room where she was: He addressed her with much Courtship; but finding that inessection, he forced her.

When this was made known to her Hushand, he burn'd with Desire of Revenge: And stirring up all the Sicilian Nobles and People, it was privately agreed between them, That on a certain Festival, when the Bells should tall to Eorn-Song, all the Sicilians should take Arms, and massacre the French throughout the Island. This Plot was carried so secretly, That before the French could get the least Intimation of it, they were all murder'd on the Day appointed.

I forgot to acquaint thee in my last, with a Villainy which was discovered in the late Tumults of Napiss. As they were marching up and down the Streets, burning the Castom-Hauses, and the Habitations of those who had been concerned in gathering the Taxes, they entered the House of a certain Notary or publick Seribe of that City, who had been represented to them, as a Promoter of those unreasonable Impositions: They seized on the Man, and began to carry his Goods out into the Street, in order to be burnt: But as they were rummaging in an Apartment which was towards the Gardens, they heard a great Shricking, as of Women affrighted; and perceiving the Voice to proceed from within a Wall in the Room where they were, they fearch'd about for a Door to enter into that Place, but finding none, they broke through the Wall; where they found two Women, with their Hair hanging down to their Ankles, and their Nails grown like the Talons of an Eagle. Enquiring of them how long they had been there, and on what Occasion. The eldest of the Women made this Answer : The Master of this House is my own Brother, who, when my Father died, was entrusted by him to pay me Six bundred Duckets, which be bequeathed me as a Legacy for my Maintenance, my Husband being dead : But my Brother, instead of doing me this Justice, immured both me and my Daughter, whom you fee bere, between thefe Walls, where we have lived thefe Seventeen Years, being allow'd by this cruel Man, no other Food but Bread and Water.

The People, incensed above Measure, at so barbarous a Cruelty, hang'd up the Notary, and gave all his Estate to this Widow and her Daughter. An exemplary Piece of Justice, perform'd by Mutineers, which could not have been done by the Law, the Crime not reaching his Life; tho' in the Sense of all Men, he merited Death. This is another Argument, That Destiny had a Handin this Insurrection; and that Massianello the Fisherman, was the Executioner of God.

I obey thee, fovereign Prelate, with an unconditional Devotion, and revere the Idea of thy Santity: Vouchiafe to pray for Mabmut, That whilst he condemns the barbarous Cruelties of the Nazarenes, he may not render himself inexcusable, by doing any Injustice himself.

Paris, 22d of the 5th Moon, of the Year 1647.

LET-

LETTER XV.

To the Kaimacham.

THE Arabian Proverb says, There is more Danger to be fear'd from one of the Coreis than from a thousand Bobecks. Thou knowest, both these were noble Families in Mecca, and sworn Enemies of the Messeger of God: But the latter, as their Name imports, were too open in their Councils, to do any considerable Execution against the Holy one: Whereas the former were always reserved, and laying of secret Trains.

Such is Cardinal Mazarini, the hidden Enemy of the Ottoman Empire. There seems to be an Ambition in this great Genius, equal to that of his Predecessor Richlieu; who would be esteem'd the most eminent among Men. Nothing will satisfy this Minister, less than a Subversion of all the Monarchies on Earth, which appear Obstacles of that Grandeur, to which he defigns to raise his Master. Yet he attempts not this by open Force, knowing that is impracticable: but acts in the Dark, striving to undermine those States by Intrigue, which he cannot subdue by Arms. He has his Agents in all the Courts of Christendom; and thou needest not startle, if I tell thee there is Ground to suspect, he is not without his Creatures at the Jublime Port. All Europe is sensible, That the late Revolutions in Portugal and Catalonia, the Insurrections in Sicily and Naples, and the Rebellion of the English, Scots, and Irish, are in part owing to the Policies of this Minister: And I can tell thee more on that Subject than is known to every one.

O/min the Dwarf, who still retains his good Inclinations to the fublime Port, finds an unsuspected Access to all the Grandees, to whom the smallness of his Bulk and Stature, affords no small Divertisement. Besides, they delight to pose him with Problems, in regard there is always something so lucky, besides the Wit, in his Answers, as either creates Admiration or Laughter. But their Mirth would quickly be changed into other Paffions, were they fenfible that their little Buffoon. is no other than a Spy upon them. For Osmin having so many Opportunities, lurks in Corners, like a Spider, undifcover'd, and unthought of: He creeps into their Bed Chambers and Cabinets. where he becomes privy to their greatest Secrets. If they should catch him in any of his Concealments, behind the Hangings; or under a Bed, it would only pass for a Frolick to give them Diverfion: And he never wants for a Repartee or a Jest, to bring himself off.

I have taught him a Cyptier, which he makes use of, to transcribe any Letters, or other Papers of Moment; with Characters for speedy Writing, which comprehend whole Sentences in a

Dash or two of the Pen. in

1:01

"Tis but lately we have pitch'd on this Method; and the first Attempt Ofmin made, was in Cardinal Mazarini's Closet; into which he flipt, under the Skirt of a Nobleman's Closek, who just then went in to speak with the Cardinal. This active Dwarf, taking Advantage of the Nobleman's Approach to the Table, dextrously crept under the Carpet which covered it, reaching down to the Floor, where he lay unseen till the Cardinal was gone, and the Closet lock dup.

During the time of their Conference, which was not very long, Office heard the Cardinal freak their Words to the Lard: One of the Slaves of that Baffa

Bassa, (said he) is an Italian, whom I formerly entertain'd in my Service, and one in whom I confide: He was taken by the Turks at Sea; and as foon as be was fold to this Grandee, he acquainted me, in a Letter, with his Condition, imploring my Affiftance towards bis Ransom. I promis'd to redeem bim. on the Conditions I have told you; and fince that, be bas not fail'd to perform them; bis Master baving accepted the Pistols, and enter'd in the Association: So that I hope, in a little Time, to see that proud tyrannical Race exterminated, the Tartars excluded from Succession, and the Empire divided by the Sword of Strangers. Ragotski is the only Obstacle; that Prince is wavering, and we can't trust bim. The Bassa of Aleppo, with those of Sidon, Damascus, and Babylon, are ready to cover the Fields of Asia with their Armies. If things were as secure on the Side of Europe, the Blow should soon be given.

There pass'd some other Discourse between them, which Osmin could not distinguish in regard they removed to the Window, and spoke low. But this was enough to rouze his Curiosity, and put him on a farther Inquisition.

As foon as the Room was void by their Abfence, he came forth from his Retirement, and fell to examining the Papers which lay on the Table, hoping to discover more of this Plot; but he was disappointed, and only met with a few Letters from his Agents in England: Wherein among other Matters, they gave the Cardinal an Account, That they had bunted the Lion into the Toils, past all Hopes of an Escape. By which, I suppose, they meant the English King, whom the Rebels have confind to a certain Castle in their Possession. Osmin transcribed some of these Letters, and brought them to me. A Copy of one of them, I here send thee enclosed: Twas written ten from the Council of the Irish Rebels. By which thou may'st see what a Share the Cardinal has in abetting these Traytors. Else how could they demand of him, The Performance of the Queen Regent's Promise, to affish them with Money and Men?

There is one also dated this present Year, and, subscribed by Monsieur Bellieure, the French Ambaffador in England: But Ofmin had not time to transcribe that, being prevented by the Cardinal's Return, which made the Dwarf inatch up his Tools, and abscond under the Table. Yet he remember'd fome of the Contents of that Letter. and told them me at his next Visit: The Amba/fador, in that Letter, informs the Cardinal of a certain German Prophet, who foretold, That there should be a great Revolution in the Government of England, and that one of the mightiest of all the Eastern Princes, should be deposed this Year, and murder'd by bis Subjects. (I pray Heaven, avert the Omen from the Seraglio!) He acquaints this Minister also, That he had succeeded in his Negotiation with the Officers of the Rebels Army. There were other obscure Passages in the Letter. which Ofmin has forgot. But these are sufficient to demonstrate, how busy the Cardinal is, and what a Hand he has in foreign Affairs.

Another Opportunity, I hope, will bring to Light more of this Minister's Secrets. Adieu.

Paris, 4th of the 6th Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XVI.

To Pesteli-Hali, bis Brother.

HE oftner I peruse the Journal of thy Travels, the more I am delighted with it. For it is evident, That the Countries through which thou hast pass'd, have been as so many Schools of Wildom to thee; wherein thou haft learn'd, even from Mens Vices, the Way to Perfection; much more from their Vertues. Thou hast found, That though Mens natural Dispositions differ, as do the Climates, which afford them Breath; yet they all agree in common Frailties. There are . also Vices peculiar to certain Countries; 'twere to be wished they could be match'd with as many national Virtues. But Human Nature is a rank Soil. more fertile in Weeds, than wbolesome Products. Yet there are Gardens, as well as Defarts: And thou hast observed some Persons, illustrious for their Goodness, and the noble Endowments of their Minds.

I am extreamly pleafed with that rare Example of Generofity; which thou relateft of an Indian Merchant; who, not content to give Alms to all that ask'd him, or whom he knew to be poot, fought daily Occasions to exercise his Charity, hunted out the Indigent and Unfortunate! And where ever he discover'd the Lineaments of Poverty in a Man's Face, or traced Footsteps of it in his Behaviour, he could not rest 'till he had relieved his Wants, and made him happy to his very Wishes. I tell thee, Poverty is a Hell upon Earth; and he that has this Curse, anticipates the Torments of the Damn'd. It eclipses the brightest Virtues, and is the very Sepulchre of brave brave Deligns: depriving a Man of the Means to accomplish, what Nature has fitted him for. and hifling the noblest Thoughts in their Embryo. How many illustrious Souls may be faid to have been dead among the Living, or buried alive in the Obscurity of their Condition, whose Perfections have rendred them the Darlings of Providerice; and Compunions of Angels; yet the insuper rable Penury of all Things, has rank'd them at mong the Caff-aways of the Barth, in the Eves of Men? To such as these, our Divine Law-giver commands us to extend our Charity, giving us certain Characters and Marks, by which we may distinguish them from the Crowd of the Unfortunate. And, I like the Indian's Bounty the better, in that he fo exactly feems to comply with this Precept of the Alcoran, generously preventing the Requests of the Indigent, and by an Excess of Benignity, courting them to accept of Relief. In this he also verifies the Arabian Proverb, which fays, He gives double, who gives un-

Vol. III. & Spy at Paris. 265

Thou commended the Industry of the Chinefe, the Advances they have made in Arts and Sciences, which, thou concludeft, is to be attributed to the Porce of their Laws, which oblige the Son to follow his Father's Trade, throughout all Generations. In this I must diffent; for, it feems rather a. Curb, than a Spur to Ingenuity, to be confin'd to Employments, for which a Man may have an Aversion. The Son not seldom abhorring those Things, wherein his Parents took Delight. Or, if not fo, yet he may be cast in a finer Mold, have a more subtle Invention; and confequently, be capable of making greater Improvements, in any Trade of his own Choice: Since, Delight sets an Edge on the Mind, gives Vigour to the Body, and adds Wings N

Digitized by Google

æ

to Business. Besides, I do not think this to be so much thy own Remark, as the Infinuation of some of that Country, who are the most conceited People in the World; ever extolling their own Policy, Laws and Governments; and imposing them as a Pattern to all other Nations.

One thing I grant they boast of with a great deal of Truth, that is, their Antiquity and unmix'd Race. Though fince the Conquest the Tartars have made of that Country, they are like to undergo the Fate of other Nations, and corrupt their Genealogies with the Blood of Strangers.

Thou camest away before that Conquest was begun, or, perhaps, before 'twas talk'd of. And I can give thee but a very imperfect Account of it. All the Intelligence we have from that King. don of late, comes in Fragments: For the Ships which bring this shatter'd News, left China in an Uproar and Confusion: Only they assure up. That the Tartars had passed the celebrated Wall, which divides them from China: That they enter'd and subdued the Northern Provinces, with an Army of Six hundred thousand Men. That very little Resistance was made against them, not even in Pequin itself, the capital Seat of the Chinele Empire, which the Ulurper Lycung z had abandon'd to the Conquerors, carrying away with him all the inestimable Treasures of the Palace. and retiring into one of the remote Provinces, was never heard of afterwards. Whence it was judged, that some of his own Party had murder'd him; partly for the sake of his prodigious Wealth, which they shared among them; and partly to revenge his Treason against the Emperor, and the innumerable Calamities he had brought upon his Country.

Before

Before those Merchants came away, the Cham of Tarkery was proclaimed in Pequin; and crown'd Emperor of China: They say, He was not above Thirteen Years old at that Time, which was in the 12th Mosa of the Year 1644. And that having sent for the chief Nobility of Tarkery to Pequin, he made Preparations to pursue his Conquests.

This is the best Account we yet have of the Affairs of that Empire; by which thou wilt enfly be induced to be of my Opinion, That the Blood of the Chimser, will in Time be shirld with that of Strangers.

We must not feek for the Originals of any People in the Country where they dwell. The most renovened Kingdoms and Empires in the World, had their first Foundations laid by Vagahonds and Fagitions. Thou art notification how valt an Extent the ancient Roman Empire had shrough Afaa, Africa and Europe; yet:that City, which was call'dethe Mifreft of, Nations, the Go metness of the whole Earth, was first built by a handful of Banditti, People who lived by Pillage and Robbery, the Out-Laws and Soum; of Has ly, affembled together from divers Perts, under the Conduct of Remulus and Rhemus: Neither had that City proved any better than a Sepulohre to them and their Deligns, had they not by a waty Suntagem, over-reach'd the Sabine Women, and to fecured to themselves a Bother rity, who should not only define, but enlarge the Dominions of their Fathers: Yet these People, of to obscure and consuled an Otiginal, as serwards: boated of the Antiquity and noble Defent of their Ramilles . No Mount more selicii ishi kuntu ingghe guibasozu ini i oldaranan Bloth were it not for the In arranged themps tigt and vistorious Medica

N 2

T٥

.. To look no farther than the great and formitable Brapire of the Olmens, we shall find it took its first Rife from Colonies of transplanted Speckians; fo that he that would have the Genealogy of a Fark, must look in the Registers of Greece, where they now live, but must carry his Search beyond the Mountain Complet, examine the Borders of Palus Maetis, or hunt his Pedigree out in Cherfenefes. What Rendutibus have not happen'd in Afia and Africk; fince the Affamption of the Me fingle of God into Puradife? Where shall we now find any Remains of the ancient Surseems or Marmalukes? The mighty Empire of the Ottomans has fivallow'd up all Thus one Nation expell another, and, there is so general a Mixture of Farrier Blood, made by the Conversion of innumerable different Nations, to the Muffalman Faith, that it is hard to know, whether our Asbefors were Scythians or Parthians, Jews or Greciant;) whether they were of the Mountains or the Valleys, of the Forests or the Plains.

in this I will except my Countrymen, the Arasiens, and those who feem to approach nearest then in manner of Life, the Tarters; the one dwelling in Tents, the other in Waggons; both in a moving Pollure; both happy in this, That they are not could'd to the Rigors of a cold Wingre, nor the scorching Heats of the Summer : but change their Soil and Climate, as the Sealon of the Pear varies: Thus, over fecuring to thomselves in all Places, either a blooming flow'ry Spring, or a moderate and fruitful Autumn. Thefe were never subdued, nor expelled those Regions wherein they mke Delight, neither would they ever mix with Strangers. But, the Chinest would exect all the World in the Purkly of their unmin'd Blood, were it not for the Incursions of their potent and victorious Neighbours.

The French say, That these People had the Use of Guns and Printing, many Hundreds of Years before they were found out in Europe. But the Germans claim the Honour of these Inventions to themselves.

Thou confirmed the Opinion of the former, in selling me, Thou hast feen fome of the Cannon belonging to the City of Pequin, on which was engraven, in Chinese Characters, a Register of their Age, which was above Two thousand Years.

I had a great deal more to say, dear Pesteli, but the Pest calls on me to hasten; besides, an extreme Dulness and Languishing of my Spirits, with which I have been persecuted, ever since this Moon sirst shewed her Crescent: Now she is in the Wane, and so, I hope, is my Malady. The Institutence this Planet seems to have on me, may make thee conclude me a Lunatiek: We are all so, in one Degree or other. There are not more apparent symptoms, That the Flux and Ressur of the Soa, owes its Original to the Neighbourhood and Motion of that Planes, then that our Constitutions way according to its Monthly Appearan-

He that created the Moon, and the Confiellations, not without respect to Mankind, give us Wisdom which shall entitle us to a Dominion over the Stars.

Paris, 14th of the 8th Moon, of the Year 1648.

N 3

LET.

LETTER XXII.

To the Aga of the Janizaries.

HE Duke of Chastillon arrived here fix Days ago, from the Army in Flanders, bringing News of a fignal Victory obtain'd by the young Prince of Conde, on the Plains of Lens. This Battle was fought on the 20th of the last Moon, the French having entirely routed the Spaniards, kill'd Three thousand of them on the Spot, taken Six thousand Prisoners, with all their Artillery and Baggage. And, to crown the Day, they have taken Lens also.

But though Fortune thus favours their Arms abroad, she has mix'd Poison with their Counfels at home. All Things here feem to portend a Civil War: The Parliament thwart the Proceedings of the Court, taking on them the Power of the ancient Spartan Ephori: They will be Comptrollers of the Regal Authority, suppressing the King's Edicts, calling his Expences to account; and, pretending to reform the Court, they play the Pedagognes with their Sovereign. On the other fide, Cardinal Mazarini, the Duke of Orleans, and other Grandees, do their utmost Endeavours to dissolve the Meetings of this Senate. They perfuade the young King, That it is but a precarious Reign, where the Sovereign must be curb'd by his Subjects: Thus they instil into his tender Years, those Maxims by which they would have him rule, when he comes of Age.

There is a Man in the Parliament whom they call Monsieur Brussels, one of their great Counsellors, a bitter Enemy of Cardinal Mazarini, and therefore cry'd up by the People for a Patriot: He is of a furious Temper, and mean Abilities; yet his noisy Zeal for the publick Liberty, has fasten'd to him the vulgar: He is become the Ringleader of the Seditions.

This Man was seiz'd as he return'd from the chief Temple, where Te Deum was fung Yesterday, for the late Victory in Flanders: And some are of Opinion, That'twas this happy News which embolden'd the Court to Inatch from the People their Darling, their Idel, the Man from whose Courage they expect a Redress of all their Grievances. Indeed, one may fay, It would feem fafer for a Traveller in the Delasts of Arabia, to tear from a Limes her young one: For, the Heads of the Faction waited but for such an Opportunity to fet all in a Flame. And the ill Success of the Court in this Action, shews, That it is dangetons to provoke the Multitude: For prefently we were all in Confusion, the Burgessis in Arms, the Shops shut up, the Streets chain'd; and all the Avenues of the Palace barricado'd. The Rabble marched up and down the Streets; threatning Destruction to Cardinal Mazarini, and all his Party. The Parliament were forced to become the Meffengers of the People, to carry their Petitions, or rather their Commands, to the Court; being threaten'd also, if they failed of Success: For they protested unanimously, That they would not lay down their Arms, till the imprifon'd Counseller was released. ...

The Queen appear'd at first inexorable, and fent their Senators away with Denial and Scoffs, wishing them Joy of their new Honour in being made the Porters of the Rabble. And the young Monarch, incensed to see his native Loyalty thus prophaned by his Subjects, bent his Brows; and casting a Look, divided betwirt Majesty and Disdain, on the Senators, utter'd their Words, Sirs! Shall it shoping he a Custom, thus to mobil the Minority of your Kings ? Or da you think our tender Years incapable of the common Senfe of other Mortals, that you presume thus insolenaly to inuade our Rights? Accuse not the Multitude, nor make them en Umbraga to your Sedition: I know the Authors of those Inmults, and shall find a Time so make them feel the Weight of my Displeasure: Think not I wear this Sword only for Ornament [laying his Hand hereely on his Hilt] ar, That the Blood of my Renounced Ancestors, is greens degenerate, or turned to Lacs mothin my Veins. Go tell your fattions Comeades, there fits this Day upon the Throne of France a King, who though be's young, yet has a Spirit and Memory which will out last bis Pupillege. With that he commended them out of his Sight.

Yet notwithfunding this, the People shreatted to bring their Darling away by Force, if he were not released in two Hours.

There were above a Hundred Thousand of them in Arms, and it might have proved a dangerous Infurrection. But, the Queen, at the second return to the Senators, hearkning to the Advice of Mazarini, and the Duke of Orleans, and remembring the late dreadful Essents of Massing Tumult in Naples, released the Prisoner; who was condustred home; last Night in Triumph, by an infinite Crowd of Priople, who filled the Air with Shouts and Acclamations.

It is discoursed here, That the Prince of Conde will speedily return to Paris: From, whom both the Court and the Fastion, promise themselves new Grounds of Triumph.

During these Commotions, Mahmut fails not to act his Part, being at no small Expense to maintains a certain Number of Strangers, whose whose whole Dependence is on me: These I instruct to mix themselves with the Rabbie, to infinuate into them hateful Notions of Cardinal Mazarini and the Court. They buz up and down the City, like Flies in this hot Season, and sting the Multitude to Fury with their Stories. I spare no Cost to procure the Cardinal's Ruin: That pernicious Wit comes not finert of his Predecessor Richlies, being as active intembroiling foreign States: Witness the Revolutions of Portugal, Catalonia, England and Naples in all which he had a principal Hand) and is ever projecting, How to aggrandige his Master. And the universal. Success of the French Arms in Germany, Flanders, Italy, and Spain, has left them nothing worth a Thought, but the Defirection of the Ofman Empire.

Eliachin handsome News every Hour, how mighty middle in the Streets while it been my Chamber; their the Streets while it been my Chamber; their the Temulu, being of Denastrans's thind, who, when the Abstians were in an Upwar, took Santhury in the Abstians were in an Upwar, took Santhury in the Abstians were in an Upwar, who when the Abstians were in an Upwar, who profing himself before the Abstians of Palla, in the Coddes; utick these Worls of Palla, I by the there for Protection; defend me from Ignurance, Bury, and Inconstancy; for I love not the Society of the Only the Dangon, and the People.

Yes, whether in my Clauston we'Abroid, be affired, Bullinian Reifeld of this Imperial City.
That Makenet divides his Field between the View, by under and the Services he does for this Grand Signier.

Ringlige der gestellt der geste

-. 11.7

N5 LET-

LETTER XVIII.

To Achmet Beig.

HIS Court is now in Mourning for the Death of Uladiflous, late King of Poland; whils the Politicians are canvasing the next Election. Those, who side with the House of Aufria favour the Succession of Prince Charles; but the France are for Casimir, their former Prisoner.

The Duke of Banaria is also dead. They say he died of Grief, to see his Country exposed to the Insults of a villorious Banay; for all his forces were sutirely defeated.

The Prince of Conde has taken Ipre in Planders; and the Arch-Duke of Austria has render'd himself Master of Courses, without drawing a Sword, or firing a Gun: The Maresebal de Rantzay has made an unhappy Attempt to surprize Ostad, a Sea-Town in Flanders. For, earrying his Forces by Water, as soon as he had landed his Men, a Tempest arose, and drove all his Ships out to Sea: So that, being encompassed by a numerous Army of his Enemies, and having no Way to clospe, he and all his Troops were made Prisoners.

From the Sea we have Advice, That there has been a Onthbat between the Duke of Rieblieu, Commander of the Navil Rorces sent to assist the Meapelisan Revolters, and Don't John of Austria, Admiral of the Spanish Fleet on that Coast: But the liftue of the Battle is not yet known; the most People guess the Victory to be on the French Side, in regard Cardinal Mazarini had, by the Advice of an Indian Ship-Wright, cassed all the French Ships to be plaister'd over with Allum, so that no Fire-

5 ×

THI

Digitized by Google.

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 275

Fire-Ships can hurt them. The Spaniards make great Use of these Fire-Ships in all their Sca-Fights, having learn'd to their Cost from the English, what Damage these Vessels do, when they formerly lost their whole Armada, which they before term'd Invincible, and with which they sailed to conquer that Island.

From Catalonia the Posts bring News, which pleases the Wives and Friends of the Soldiers in those Parts: For the Mareschal de Schomberg has cut in pieces the Spanish Army, taken Tortoja by Assault, where the Souldiers found a Booty of above Fifteen hundred thousand Livres.

A Courier is come from Swedeland, who brings an Account of a late formidable Conspiracy in Russia, against the Life of the Czar. The greatest Part of the Muscovite Grandees were concern'd in this Plot, defigning to change the Form: of Government, and divide that mighty Empire into feveral Principalities, whereof every one of the Confpirators should have a Share. And that they should be all subject to one Chief, who should be elected by the rest, after the Manner of Germany. To this Purpose, they had made a private Treaty with the Tartars. Morosoph, the, prime Minister of State, and the Chancellor Nazari, were of the Conspiracy. Perhaps thou wilt lament the Fate of the latter, having received extraordinary Civilities from him, when thou wert at that Court.

Banaanoph, Son of the Patriarch of Mojco; reveal'd the Plot, with the Names of the Configurators, to the grand Duke: Who sent to them next Day to his Palace, under divers Pretences, where he commanded them all to be kill'd, and their Bodies to be thrown to the Dogs in the Streets of that City.

The French report strange Things of Sultan Ibrahim: I wish all go well at the fublime Port. If thou hast the same Desires, reveal them to none but thy Friend; for at some Times a Man's best Thoughts will be interpreted for Transen. Adieu.

Paris, 15th of the roth Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XIX

To the Mufti.

HY venerable Letters are come fafe to my Hands, bringing Light and Confolation to the faithful Exile. With profoundest Reverence I kis'd and unfolded the Papers, which contain the facred Inftructions of the Firer of God. I'blefsed myself, when I read the Charge of Royal Enormities, the exorbitant Paffions of a Massulman Emperor, and the Prophamation of the Throne founded on Justice. Thou hast prevented the Qualms of a too scrupulous Loyalty, by affuring me, That it is a fundamental Maxim of our Law, That all Men in the World, without respect of Birth or Quality, are obliged to appear before the Juffice of God : And, That be who they; not the Law, es no Musiulman : And, If the Emperor bimfett be in this Number, he ought to be deposed forthwith:
This has abundantly satisfied my Conscience,

This has abundantly fatisfied my Confeience, coming from the Hands of him, from whole firsting there can be no Appeal on Earth. I finili therefore readily obey thy Orders; and without Demur, put in Execution what thou haft commanded me.

Who

Who can blame the just Indignation of Sultan Morat's Widow, who in defence of her Chaftity, threatned to sheath her Ponyard in the Breast of her Sovereign? But, incomparably more eminent was thy Daughter's Virtue, who not being able to relift the Force of the mighty Ravifler, after the was polluted, would, like another Lucretia. have flabb'd her felf, had she not been prevented by the Sultan. How has he fully'd the Glory of the Ofman Race, by these effeminate Vices: What an Indignity has he committed against our doing Law? Against the principal Patriarch of the Elet? Much more noble was the Continence of the African Scipio, who, when at the Conquest of New Carthage, a Virgin of admirable Beauty was chosen from among the Captives and prefented to him, would by no Means defile her. but reftor'd her again without Blemish to her Parents, faying withal, to those that stood near Aim, Were I a private Man, I would gratify my Puffion, by the Enjoyment of this lovely Maid; but, it becomes not the Leader of an Army, to give fo bad an Example; nor a Conqueror, to yield his Heart se the Charms' of bis Captive.

But it feems, That Sultan Ibrabim was rather ambitious of the Character of Augustus the Roman Empires, of whom it is faid, That he never spared dry Woman in his Eust: But if he cast his Eye on a beautiful Lady, though her Husband were of the first Quality in the Empire, he would immediately send the Officers, to bring her to him by fair Means or by Force:

The Philispiper Athenders, who was very intimate with this Monarch, took a pretty Method to reform this Vice in his Master. For, when the Emperor one day had lent a choic Sedan or Chair; for a certain Noble Wiman; of the Holse of the Camilli; the Philispiper, fearing forme Disafter might might enfue, (for that Family was very popular, and highly respected in Rome,) he goes before to the Lady's Palace and acquainting her with it, she complain'd to her Husband of the Indignity was offer'd her. He boiling with Anger, threaten'd to flab the Messengers of the Emperor, when they came. But the prudent Philosopher appeas'd them both, and only desir'd a Suit of the Lady's Apparel, which was granted him. He foon put it on, and hiding his Sword under his Robes, enter'd the Sedan, personating the Lady. The Messengers who knew no other, carried him away to the Emperor. He, heighten'd with Defire, made haste to open the Sedan himself when Athenodorus, suddenly drawing his Sword, leap'd forth upon him, saying, Thus mightest thou have been murder'd: Wilt then never. quit the Vice, which is attended with fo much Danger? Jealoufy and Revenge might bave substituted an Affassin thus disguised in my room: But, I took Care of thy Life. Henceforth take Warning. The Emperor, pleas'd with the Philosopher's Stratagem, gave him ten Talents of Gold, thanking him for this feafonable Correction: And from that time began to reffrain unlawful Pleasures, applying himself to a virtuous Life.

Thou seeth, holy Prelate, that by perusing the Histories of the Antients, a Man may furnish himself with useful Examples, and proper Observations. I always keep by me Plutarch's Works, and those of Livy, a Roman. Historian z as also Tacitus, who has lest the Annals of that forming dable Empire to Posterity. It were a desirable thing, That the Mussumman Scribes were employ'd in translating such Records as these, into the Arabick or Turkish Languages: That so the true Faithful, who are desirad by God to canquer the World, may not be ignorant of the memorable Transactions.

2

Transactions of former Ages. Some of our Subtans have been curious, to have Plutanch's Wrisings render'd in the familiar Speech of the Ottomans. There are other Memoirs, not less worth the Labour. If it shall enter into thy Heart, toencourage so profitable a Work, the whole Empire. of the refign'd to God, will be indebted to thee. But, who am I, that presume to direct the great Father of the Faithful? Thou art enlighten'd with all Knowledge and Wisdom! Peradventure thou hast Reasons to divert thee from such an Enterprise, which I cannot comprehend. Therefore I cover my Mouth with Dutt, and acquir esce.

As to the late Revolution, I am not to dispute the Will of my Superiors. However, I receive the News of that Tragedy with less Discontent, in regard, thou thy felf, who art the Oracle of the . Mussulmans, hast thought fit to depose Sultan Ibrobin; using herein the Advice and Consent of his own Mother, and of Mahmut Baffa, with that of the Janizar Aga, who, next to the felf, are two the most knowing Sages in the Empire.

What remains, but that I shall pray for the long Life of Sultan Mahmut? Defiring also, That Heaven may so direct his Counsels, that he may never do any thing to merit the Fate of his unbappy Fatber.

Paris, 13th of the 11th Moon. of the Year 1648.

with the Part of the lake of LET-

LETTER XX.

To Chirurgi Muhammel Bassa.

T length the Deputies of the Nazarene Priners at Munster have concluded a Peace: They have been these six Years debating about Trifles and Puncishids, as is the Manner of the Christians, even in the most important Afficirs. This Treaty was fign'd the 24th of the last Mann, when all farther Hostilities coas'd on all Sides. except on the Parts of France and Spain, whose Quarrel could by no means be adjusted; in this general Arrespont of Christendom.

Thou had by this time heard of the late Tumulti and Emotions in this City; the Dillifiedion between the Count and Parliament, with the hort Siege of Bazis. Now things feem to be compostd, and in a Calma: But it may only prove a Truce, while both Parties take Breath, to ruth unon each other with the greater Violence. City is unmeasurably rich and populous, and can . arm an Hundred thousand Men at an Hour's Warning. The Punliament about their Quarrel: This encourages, them. to: wie with the Court: The Merchants live like petty Kings: Abundance of Gold fills them with Pride and Ambition. Whilft the Court, in the mean nine, are close and referv'd, projecting how to destroy the Faction, and affert the regal Authority. The Queen Regent is resolute and severe, yet suffers her self to be mollify'd with the milder Counsels of Gardinal Mazarini, and the Duke of Orleans.

In the Beginning of this Reign, I gave an Account to the Ministers of the Port, of the Duke of Beaufort's Recufort's Imprisonment in the Caftle of the Wood of Vinciennes, which is one of the King's Palaces: This Prince is now escap'd from his Confinement, and come into the City: The Fastious cry him up for a Patriot, and are resolved to protect him with their Lives and Fortunes.

If thou yet retainest thy Health and Vigour, thou art happy. As for me, I feel continual Decays; yet am not troubled, perceiving at the same time that I approach nearer to Immortality. Wherescope I neither seek Restoratives, nor consult Physicians; but suffering my self to dissolve gradually, I die with Pleasure, pluming and preparing my self daily, as one ready to take Wing for a more bappy Region.

Paris, 24th of the 12th Moon, of the Year 1648.

LETTER XXI.

. To Dgnet Oglou,

AM not surprized at the News of Sultan Ibrabine's being depoted and strangled. 'Tis but what I have for a long time sear'd: These restless Janizaries will ruin the Ottoman Empire. Neither am I startled to hear that his Mother was accessary to his Fall, having a double Motive, Ambition and Revenge, to induce her Consent. She always asiested to rule; and therefore, could not brook the Sultan's resolute Management of Affairs, without following her Advice. Besides, she could not easily forget her Disgrace and Consinement on the account of the Armenian Lady's Death.

But I am aftonish'd and vex'd to hear, that the Musti should be concern'd in so black a Tragedy. How shall we have the Considence hereaster, to reproach the Christians with their frequent Treasons and Murdering of their Kings; since it will be easy for them to retort, That the supreme Patriarch of our Law has enter'd into the Secret of Rebels, conspired the Death of his Sovereign, and caused him to be deposed and strangled?

As for the Aga of the Janizaries, I suppose him rather over-aw'd into the Conspirace, by the forcible Reasons and elegant Parale of the Musti, than any ways voluntarily engaging himself in Crimes, to which he seems to have no Inclination. Besides, he could not resuse to make one in the Party, after it had once been proposed to him; unless he were resolv'd to be the first Vistim of their Jealousy, and be murder'd himself, to prevent the Discovery of the rest. Yet his Duty and Honour ought to have superseded all other Considerations: And he should have chosen to die in his Allegiance, rather than to live stain'd with so foul a Crime.

However it be, I cannot approve their Treafon. For whatever the Vices of the Sultan were, they had no Right to purish him: He was accountable to none but God: And they invaded the Prerogative of Heaven, in dethroning him, whom the divine Previdence had invested with the Imperial Diadem.

Much less can I approve their Impiety, in defaming him now he is dead. Neither can I in Conscience comply with the Injunctions of the Musti, who has commanded me, in a Letter, to spread an ill Character of Sultan Ibrabim, among the Christians, that so his own Proceedings may appear just 'Tis true, I owe much to the

Digitized by Google

Vol. III. a Spy at PARIS. 283

the Authority of this fovereign Guide of true Believers; yet I must not, to pay this Debt, turn Bankrupt of my Reason: I owe something to myself, and to the distinguishing Character of a Man. I promised him, indeed, to obey his Commands in this Point: But he that has given me a Dispensation for all the Lies and Perjuries I shall be guilty of in Paris, will, I hope, pardon me, if I turn my own Confessor, and absolve myself, for not performing my Word to him in this Point.

I am not often guilty of aspersing the Living, but I abhor to injure the Dead; lest I should incur the Fate of him, who being at Enmity with a samous Wrestler, pursued him with Malice and Revenge, even in his Grave. For envying the Honour that was due to this Wrestler's Memory, in that his Statue was set up in a publick Place, he went privately one Night, with design to throw the Statue down: But after he had splightfully dissigned it in several Parts with a Hammer, and was busy in working its Overthrow; the Image on a sudden sell on him, and crush'd him to Death: As if the Spirit of him whom it respectived, had given it this Fall, to revenge the Malice of his Adversary.

Certainly, the Ancients were not ignorant what they said when among other sage Counsels, they advised Mortals, Not to speak ill of the Dead, but to esteem them sacred, who are gone into the immortal State. And Plato's Ring had this Motto on it: It is easier to provoke the Dead, than to pacify them, when once provoked. Intimating thereby, that the Souls of the Departed are sensible of the Injuries that are done them by the Living.

Therefore I will shun Detraction, especially of the Dead. And, if I cannot say much in Praise Praise of Sultan Ibrabin's Virtues, let his Vices be buried with him in eternal Obligion.

I run no Hexards in writing thus frankly to thee, being affured of thy Fidelity. Befides, Death (which is the worst Punishment can be inflicted on me for what I have said, should it be known,) would not be bitter, when given by a Friend. Dear Deate, adieu.

Paris, 20th of the 1ft Moon, of the Year 1649.

LETTER XXII.

To Daneemar Kefrou, Kadilifquer of Romania.

THEN I informed thee how the Scots had fold their King to the English Rebels, it was easy to presage the Consequence, without a Revelation. When Sovereign Monarchs become the Meribandize of Fallians, they commonly pay the Price with their own Blood: And there are few Examples of Princes that have been imprison'd by their Subjetts, and yet have escaped a violent Death: For those who have once advanced to far in their Treason, as to seize the Person of their Sovereign, can never retire with Safety to themfelves, or at least their own Guilt makes them think fo. The Consciousness of what they have already done, prompts them to proceed in their Wickedness: and their Despair of saving their own Lives, makes them conclude it necessary to take away bis, whose violated Majesty, they fear, will never pardon to impudent an Essay of Trea-Lon.

But

But the Method which the English have taken to murther their King, has not a Precedent in Hi-Rosy: These Inside's have out-stripped all former Traytors, in the Contrivance and Execution of their Registide: They have even surpassed themfelves, and their own first Defigns.

At has been usual for Trayters, to take away the Life of a depos'd Monarch privately, by Poifon or Affaffin, either in respect to his royal Blood, or to avoid the Possibility of a Rescue, from any of his loyal Friends and Subjects. But, these Barbarians were resolved publickly to insult on Majesty, to brave the whole World in the Execution of their Villainy, and make a postpous Conclusion of their Treasons. For, They erected a new Divan, or Court of Judicature, compoled of the most infamous Traytors: There they formally try'd their Severeign, by a Law of their own making: condemn'd him as a Tyrant and a Traytor: And finally, caused his Head to be chopt off with an Axe, by an Executioner, before the Gates of his own Palace, in the Sight of Thousands of his Subpas; that so they might appear, not so much to kill their King, as to defiroy the Monarchy it felf. and triumph in its Ruin.

Hast thou, O venerable Judge of the Faithful, over read or heard of such a during Treason? All Europe startes at the monstrous Fact. And Cardinal Maxarini himself, who carried on that private Web of sactions Dusign in England, whole first Threadnais Predectifur Richlies had spun; yet expressed an Horror, at the News of this Tragedy. And, I look not on this to be an Artisce of Policy in him to blind the World; but a real Discovery of his Sentiments: For he is too generates to approve so barburges a Proceeding against in

Severeign Memoreb, though his Enemy,

T'other

1. 180 a h w h & to 1 da

Tother Day he was heard to say, That in Revenge of the King's Murder, he would embarrals the Counsels of the English Rebela, more than be had done these of their Sovereign.

This was not spoken so secretly, but Mahmat had Intelligence of it within an Hour: For I have more Ears in Paris, than those on my Head, to hearken after the Intrigues of this Minister: And it will be difficult for him hereafter to speak, write or act any thing; no, not even in his private Closet, which will not be disclosed to me.

Yet, though I thus watch his Motions as an Enemy, and do my utmost to render his Defigns against the Ottomas Port ineffectual, I cannot in my Heart condemn this Minister, who all the while acts but the part of a faithful Servant, and an able Statesman, in striving to aggrandize his Master.

His supporting also the Fastions in England, and nourishing the Discontents of that giddy beaded People, were but the Result of his Zeal for his Country, and for the Church, whereof he is one of the principal Pillers: It being evident from his Grief at that King's Murder, That he bore no Malice against him, but only sought to humble him into Terms of Compliance with Prave.

When I say this, I suppose the Gardinal's Sorrow on that Account, to be free from Fiction: But who knows when the Actions of Statesmen are undifguird, and when not? For I am well assured, That whilst his Agents were busy in embroiling that Nation, he promised the exiled English Queen, to assist her Husband with Men and Money against those very Robels, with whom he held a private Correspondence; and to whom his Costers were really open.

Most of the European Stateform are corrupted with the Maxims of a certain famous Writer whom whom they call Machiavel. This State Casuift has taught them, to boggle at no Crimes, which may advance the Ends they aim at; every thing, in his Opinion, being boneft, that is successful. Thus, Policy among the Nazarenes, is degenerated into fordid Craft: And that which was once deservedly esteem'd a Virtue, necessary to the Governments of the World, is now turn'd into a Vice; of which the very Out-Laws, Free-Booters and Pirates, are asham'd.

Vol. III. a Spy at Paris. 287

God, who suffer'd the Earth to be inhabited by Angels, for an infinite Number of Ages before he created Adam, and then expelling them hence for their Wickedness, and turning them to Devils. gave this Globe for a dwelling Place to Men; grant, That the enormous Crimes of Mortals may not provoke bim to exterminate our buman Race, and restore the Devils to their ancient Habitati-

ONS.

Paris, 12th of the 2d Moon. of the Year 1649.

The End of the Third Volume.

mous of dather to the Suracion impression of his harry to 14 16 2 Por gerous de l'account 20 of the graves teat for hide and with and distudy there & fores -133 To produtions extract Sallathe 159. French Probasis L. May Spran -178 Invised to intering that floots in Manife 7 4 - 7 215 11 11